Student Returning from Abroad Develops Unintelligible Accent

Wilson, sporting her new beret like an elitist snob.

Carrie Wilson is back at Wash U for her senior year after just, like, an absolutely amazingly incredibly awesome semester abroad in Europe. Unfortunately, no one is able to understand a word she says.

"Ehy grublentond, lehkins shmow se qweenter leyuuks, like, nawnh ilk sem newtlicke, ya know?!" Carrie said.

Uhhh. Come again?

"Literally nothing she says make sense," explained Traci Martinez, a one-time acquaint-tance of Carrie's. "We understand she had a super, life-changing time abroad, but the accent she developed is incomprehensible, and the beret she bought in Paris is hideous."

Sophia Sowinski, coordinator of Overseas Programs, believes students returning from abroad may experience a difficult adjustment period upon returning to campus. She explained, "although the often touted Holmes Lounge and Brookings Quad are aesthetically sufficient, any student who has experienced the mountains of Kazakhstan or the rainforests of Belize will surely scoff at the American banality of the university. Returning students may adopt new diet choices, accents, and ways of speaking to which normal students absolutely, in no way, shape or form, will ever relate."

Carrie Wilson was last seen at Cherry Tree Café pouring Sauvignon blanc into her espresso and toasting to international tolerance with a group of exchange students.

Guy Mangled by Dog No Longer Finds Dog Cute

Pat Lifton was brutally mauled by his friend's German Shepherd this summer. The perpetrator is a 9-month-old puppy, and despite his vicious, nearly fatal assault on Lifton, nobody can stop talking about how doggone cute that pup is.

"The other day—it was the darndest thing—the puppy fell right to sleep in his bowl of food! He just plunked down and spilled the kibbles everywhere, but it was so fricken cute! Just sleeping! Can you believe it? Totally adorable!" all of Lifton's friends emphatically recalled.

Following twenty stitches and three intensive face-restructuring surgeries, Lifton still looks very fucked up from the attack. His left eye is completely non-functioning, he only has three remaining fingers, and although possibly unrelated, he is suffering from early-onset erectile dysfunction.

"I wish everyone would stop talking about how cute that dogdamned demonic German Shepherd is," Lifton fumed as drool which he can no longer control trickled down his chin.

Nonetheless, Lifton's friends are adamant about turning his distasteful view of the puppy around. Convinced his current state of trepidation, disgust, and recently diagnosed clinical depression is just a phase, his friends are committed to finding new cute anecdotes to share about their favorite German Shepherd and his lovable quirks.

"Oh, phooey, Pat will come around!" assured his lifelong buddy, Mitch. "Sure, spending a month in the hospital at risk for meningitis and rabies isn't exactly an ideal summer, but gee, when that precious little pup buries his face in your lap, it is just so dang adorable—I could melt right into his furry face!"

Since the attack, Lifton has taken to wearing ear buds around his friends to avoid being subjected to their insensitive commentary and undeniable favoritism toward the dog that ripped his face to shreds.

Really High Kid Not Surprised by Interaction with Talking Cat

Robert Howardson, Three 6 Mafia enthusiast and frequent marijuana user, was totally unphased by his brief yet enlightening conversation with a talking cat.

According to bystanders, Howardson was baked out of his fucking mind at the time of the incident. The Wash U junior had reportedly consumed at least one and a half "magic brownies" and taken multiple massive bong rips just before the inspiration to walk around the block overwhelmed him. While outdoors, all evidence suggests Howardson encountered a stray tabby cat with whom he was able to maintain a coherent discussion.

Although neither Howardson nor his feline interlocutor were available for comment, the two are suspected to have discussed various topics ranging from current events to gender dilemmas in modern existentialist thought.

Girl Finishes Roommate's Hummus-- Friendship Terminates

Karina Lopez and Samantha Halsted promptly stopped being friends the minute Karina realized Samantha had eaten her entire container of red pepper hummus. Although the roommates have been best friends for two years now, Karina was recently overheard describing Samantha as completely dead to her.

Empty container, previously full of Halsted's hummus.

"It really pisses me off because the only groceries she ever buys are cookies and Gatorade" vented Karina. "So either that bitch was dipping her Chips Ahoy in my hummus... or she was just scooping it straight out with a spoon. And since I brought all the silverware for our apartment, she barely has a right to touch the spoons anyway. What a whore!"

Karina's friends have jointly determined that she is absolutely not overreacting since hummus is too delicious to share and since nobody ever really liked Samantha anyway.

The friendship appears unsalvageable as rumors are emerging that Samantha may also be guilty of occasionally using Karina's coffee creamer without asking.

Friend Definitely Didn't Steal Other Friend's Chair

Last Thursday, senior Katie Wabash welcomed friends to her Washington Avenue apartment to show off the new chair she definitely did not steal from friend and neighbor Mindy Johnson.

"Honestly, I have no idea where I found the chair! It definitely was not from Mindy's apartment. More likely than not, I lawfully purchased it from a legitimate retail establishment," Katie explained while avoiding eye contact and sweating profusely from her armpits.

"Most importantly, it definitely wasn't from Mindy's apartment!" Katie loudly reiterated.

Katie's new chair is black and beige, just like the one Mindy lost, and the chair features a bouillabaisse stain, which is reportedly Mindy's favorite food. The chair also has a little "Property of Mindy Johnson" label on the bottom.

As of press time, Mindy is still looking for her chair and asks if anyone has seen it to please let her know.

Chancellor Wrighton Has Emergency Surgery to Remove Foot from Mouth

After receiving a frantic call from the house of Washington University Chancellor Mark S. Wrighton, paramedics arrived at approximately 2:30 AM to find the Chancellor with his entire right foot lodged firmly in his mouth, extending down into the trachea.

It appears a case of New York Times publicity this summer in which the Chancellor failed to convince anyone that the university's financial assistance program is not total bullshit, combined with a rare variation of brain fart syndrome, caused his entire foot-shoe and all--to end up in his mouth.

"I've never seen anything like it," said Dr. Charles Martin, who performed the successful surgery to dislodge the foot. "I thought it was bad when a bunch of frat boys came in last semester with their feet in their mouths, but Wrighton's was a particularly severe case."

Wrighton remained in the hospital for observation on Tuesday night, before being released under instruction to stop being so fucking cheap and to keep his leg elevated.

As of 4:14 AM, Wrighton's chances to be offered a job at Harvard were pronounced dead.

Someone Out There Is Master Prankster

Somewhere between the time Adam Johnson peed on a cellophane covered toilet and the time his roommate Mac Simpson was tarred and feathered as he left the dorm, the residents of the Millbrook apartments realized they were the targets of a serious prankster.

Recently, the Millbrook roommates have been victim to odd and unexplainable phenomena. For example, Johnson reported being "very weirded out" one morning when ten parakeets flew out of his mini fridge dressed in felt vests.

Similarly, Simpson recalled returning to his dorm late one Saturday evening, only to find a faint outline of Jesus' profile imprinted on his pillow.

"Well, I'm a quarter Jewish, and I was pretty blackout that night, so I wasn't totally sure if it was Jesus at all, and I had no idea how to handle the situation," Simpson stated. "But I did know that I was pranked. Someone out there seriously got me good. The question is... who?"

WUPD is unsure how long the investigation will last, but until further notice, students are urged to keep their salt and sugar clearly labeled, and to not bite into sandwiches without checking for hidden toxins, tomato look-alikes, and/or animal larvae.

Freshman Jizzes Over First Lecture

Marty Goldman, stimulated freshman.

Marty Goldman couldn't help but ejaculate into his own pants on Thursday morning while attending his first-ever freshman lecture in LabSci 300.

The rigor of Wash U has always appealed to Goldman. As a self-proclaimed "scholastic die-hard," Goldman has always had a strong sexual fetish for challenging academics. However, Goldman was blown away by the overt sexuality of his first brain-bending lecture, and he experienced sexual ecstasy to the point he never imagined possible.

"I know it was immature to cum all over myself, but I couldn't help it. The stimulating environment of the lecture hall mixed suggestively with the spicy scent of pencils and body odor to create a titillating atmosphere. It was like each word that rolled off my professor's aged and wise tongue was a sweet aphrodisiac," Goldman panted as he lightly stroked the hard wooden armrest to his right.

Marty Goldman expects to continue experiencing premature ejaculation frequently during his first semester at Wash U. This sort of reaction is reminiscent of the time in high school when Goldman barely escaped to the bathroom before reaching sexual climax during the AP Physics exam's friction calculations.

Unfortunately, Goldman is still very much a virgin in the literal sense, and prospects do not look promising for any real sex in the foreseeable future.

Point

It's refreshing to attend the same university as so many refined intellectuals

by Landon von Maur, undergraduate scholar

The intellectual aura and synergy here at Washington University are outstanding. Attending this sort of elite establishment is a privilege in which I take pride. I know that any of my dormitory co-habitants would be delighted to discuss post-Soviet Russia if the fancy so strikes us. Indeed, I do believe they may even have some Dostoyevsky excerpts in mind to add nuance to my postulations. I cannot imagine attending a "party school" where the time and genius of brilliant professors would be wasted on classes with inebriated ragamuffins as peers.

You have something in your teeth

by Max Stein, regular student

I'm sorry man-- huh? I think you were saying something, because your lips kept moving up and down, but I didn't understand a single word. Actually, it's pretty hilarious -- there's a huge piece of spinach stuck in your teeth. Actually--aw dang, this is really nasty--it may be something else. It looks creamier than I thought. Did you eat avocado today? Ew, gross, how about I just try and pick that out for you. No? You sure? Ok, you're gonna need some floss then.

Professor Regrets Drinking Bottle of Wine Before Lecture

Professor Jetson feeling a little loose, focusing on not slurring her words.

Archaeology Professor Sandy Jetson finished off a carafe of half-priced Pinot Noir at lunch before her afternoon lecture last Thursday. Aside from a brief non-sequitur about her first husband's butt chin, Jetson's lecture on Paleolithic Biofacts reportedly ran relatively smoothly. Nonetheless, Jetson reports feeling "kind of goofy" about being so clearly tipsy in front of her students. She says she will likely split the wine with a friend next time.

B-School Students Learn to Speak, Write in Communications Classes

This fall, the Olin Business School, ranked fourth nationally, will be offering communications classes in which students are taught basic skills such as speaking and writing. Despite the prestigious national ranking, the new class was added after an Olin student-run experiment proved, albeit based on elementary arithmetic on an Einstein's napkin, a 67% literacy rate amongst the business school students.

In an exclusive interview, Dean Rick Patel sheds some light on the wealth of benefits that business students will gain from the addition of the new communications class.

"When I learned speak at age of 31, it very changed my life. It still difficult, I still am learn, but communication much important of business," Patel articulated.

Business students, like junior Tricia Johnson, are already making impressive strides with the new communications classes in place.

"Never I knew that the symbols in signs and paper had actually meaning. Wonders I what other mysteries of Earth to discover!"

Tricia's profound success in the English language is not yet the norm for all business students, but educational experts are hoping that one day it might be. A University cognitive psychologist adds, "While cases like Tricia's are rare, studies show that nearly half of our business students have the intellectual capacity for English fluency with at least four years of rigorous study."

For the spring semester, the business school has plans to implement game theory classes where students can opt to learn strategies for games such as tag and duck-duck-goose.
