Washington University Tuition Raised to Your Firstborn Child

Washington University announced changes to its tuition structure on Friday, on the grounds that new construction, rising energy prices, and the increasing demands of the Mexican drug cartels that underwrite the university all amount to a higher cost for students in the coming academic year. Tuition will increase from $44,100 to a lifetime of slave labor performed by your firstborn child.

"At first, we were going to accept payment for the higher tuition in cash, check, or truckloads of gold, but then we realized that it would be easier for students to pay in flesh and blood," explained Vice Chancellor for Finance, Lucinda Whitfield. "Unfortunately, many of our current students will not be able to pay off their debts in the remainder of their lifespan, so instead we ask that they give us the rights to their unborn children. It's a heck of a deal, really."

Despite the university's recent commitment to an increase in financial aid, many university donors have expressed reticence over giving up their own children to fund scholarships, leaving many low-fertility families in the lurch. Fortunately, the office of financial aid is currently working on a program through which students could pay off their tuition by stealing babies from local homeless shelters to pay off debts to the university.

Whitfield acknowledged students' concerns about whether they will be able to keep up with rising tuition in coming years. "Not to worry," she said, "by 2018 we plan to be in control of all of the world's capital, and then we will no longer have any need for you peasants. I mean.....when the economy recovers, tuition should come down again."

Entire Campus Super Chapped

As frigid, dry weather sweeps through the St. Louis region, the Washington University student bodies are reportedly really chapped right now. The flaky, dry, roughness is visibly plaguing campus students, who collectively seem to be fighting a losing battle against the winter's harsh conditions.

"At least we're all in this together," Kaitlyn Anderson stated through a Vaseline-caked mouth as a small stream of blood trickled from a crack in her lower lip. "I've been slathering cream on my hands non-stop. But you know how it goes, slather, slather, slather, CRACK, BLEED, DAMMIT, I CAN'T WIN."

The Washington University campus bookstore has reported astronomical Chap-Stick and Burt's Bees purchases in the past month as students try desperately to combat their dehydrated faces, lips, elbows, knees, and inner thighs.

"Students will come in here, literally about to disintegrate they're so crackly and gross, and they'll buy every single moisturizing ingredient we can squeeze onto the shelves," explained long-time bookstore cashier, Jared Phillips. "They'll get the rejuvenating products, the balm products, the waxes, the revitalizing products, even just plain butter.... and they'll still look like fucking Gollum and Voldemort's lovechild."

The problem is so pervasive among the student body that Washington University administrators have begun discussions regarding a new initiative called the "Moist-Mosaic Project." Although the details remain fuzzy, hundreds of thousands of dollars will be used to fund the project's ambitious endeavors to achieve moist, intact skin for each and every student. The "Moist-Mosaic Project" aims to provide a place for chapped students to come together and voice their concerns about the daily struggles of having grody chapped skin, and will provide an active forum to discuss any biased encounters they suffer through due to their unattractive appearance.

New Sorority Member Feels Empowered, Redefined

After freshman Chelsey Lewis accepted her bid to join one of Washington University's most elite sororities, she felt an incredible sense of power and achievement. She had obviously rocked her recruitment conversations, since she got asked back to all of the hottest sororities on pref's day. After blowing the girls out of the water on bid day she was at last rewarded with the eternal bonds that only sisterhood and a hefty membership fee can provide.

Lewis has been overcome with emotion since her bid acceptance, but is especially pleased to have such crucial guidance and reassurance from her new sisters in the coming years.

"College can be an uncertain time. Everyone is trying to figure out who they are, but thanks to recruitment, I already know!" Lewis gushed at us in her new "GREEK" t-shirt. "It's nice to have so many role-models to show me exactly who I'm supposed to be. I know that now I'll probably major in Psychology, go out on Thirsty Thursdays, have a guaranteed table to sit at in the library, and probably date a guy in Jim's frat... Just like my sisters! Plus, now it's totally okay for me to use exclamation marks all the time! When I talk and when I write! And smiley faces! And puppy gifs!! And buzzfeed articles!! Yeee, I can't wait to go to a mixer!"

Lewis admits she and many new sorority members are struggling with an adjustment period as new members slowly begin conforming to their new friend groups.

"Oh you know, there are slight hurdles. Like, growing up, I thought I was an introvert, but judging by my sorority's engrained reputation on campus, I was wrong! I also have brown hair, but little did I know that I was destined to be a blonde. Thank God for hair-dye... Sometimes genetics can really get it wrong!"

Lewis has also expressed excitement concerning the oodles of exclusive sorority goodies she will collect from her new sorority sisters. She can't believe how lucky she is to know that there will be a committee of girls assigned to making sure she has a birthday cake every year and cupcakes every time she aces an exam, or fails an exam, or just does okay on an exam.

"At the end of the day, nothing means more to me than sisterhood," Lewis explained as we wrapped up the interview. "I can already tell joining this sorority is the best decision of my entire life."

Report: Massive Bureaucratic Fuckup Happens Yet Again

In what most people are calling just another day within a convoluted, nebulous, and baffling managerial system, another failure of university bureaucracy has waylaid the needs of one more earnest WashU student. Conflicting reports surrounding the event suggest that the problem may have been a simple misunderstanding or a failure of communication, although some are reporting that it was the fault of the system at large.

Experts say that the exact cause of the backrooms nightmare does not matter, and even if it did, it would take weeks for the university to organize the information. Whatever the explanation, the lapse in simple paperwork processing will prevent some unfortunate student from studying abroad, getting into the class he or she needs to complete his or her major, or graduating on time--maybe all of the above, although the exact damage remains to be seen.

The student reported not being particularly disappointed by the fundamental error of the system, explaining that it's pretty much par for the course. "It's like that quote," he or she said expressionlessly, "the best laid plans of mice and men always go to complete shit when you're at the mercy of Wash U's bureaucratic system. Oh well, I can't be too mad at the whole school, because at least the Career Center is helping me get that summer internship I've been looking forward to all year."

Similar and perhaps identical logistical nightmares will continue to crop up at the university for all of eternity, officials reported, regardless of continuing efforts to contain them.

As of press time, the student's application for the summer internship he or she has been looking forward to all year was sitting in a recycling bin on campus, since no one ever bothered to make sure that it made it through the appropriate channels.

Everyone at Restaurant Wished They Ordered What That Guy Got

Last Wednesday during the lunch rush, every single customer at the neighborhood diner left feeling irritated and unsatisfied, each wishing they had ordered what area man Paul Turner was eating. Although nobody could figure out exactly what Turner had ordered, all agreed it looked "really friggin' good".

"I think it might've been the special," explained Sarah Myerson, who has been trying to shed her last few post-pregnancy pounds for months now. "There was all this gooey cheese and pesto sauce... It smelled mostly like freshly baked rosemary bread. But then at one point I thought I smelled a tiny hint of maple syrup. Or I'm not sure really, maybe garlic and thyme? I don't know. But wow, my mouth is watering. It just smelled so good... So, so good... Ah fuck, why didn't I order that!?" Myerson wondered as she banged her fists on the table over her plate of grilled chicken and steamed green beans.

Turner savored each bite of his meal as he chewed no less than twenty times per bite so he could better experience the intricacies of the harmonizing flavors and textures in the dish. He allowed himself nearly an hour to finish his entree. During the meal, he reportedly turned down requests from all of his children and one stranger to "try just one bite, please, just one."

Conversation About The Weather Sparks Controversy, Fight

Martin Taylor and Chandler Reynolds's banal weather-related small-talk turned violently controversial last Thursday. Taylor and Reynolds shocked students and faculty alike when their mundane weather chat erupted into a shameless tussle in the middle of Tisch Commons. Both Reynolds and Taylor reflected on the experience for WUnderground.

"We were in an area with windows. It was crystal clear that it was hardly snowing at all," fumed Taylor as he recalled the incident. "Despite Chandler's egregious delusions, at most, AT MOST, it was barely spitting some wintry mix. It was certainly, definitely, absolutely NOT snowing."

Reynolds, on the other hand, maintains that at the time of the incident, it was actually snowing pretty hard.

"Literally, a blizzard! I don't remember the exact words he used, but that oblivious asshole had the nerve to say that it was more like a light wintry mix. Are you kidding me? Are you FUCKING kidding me? What kind of ignorant dickwad would have the nerve to say something like that?" Reynolds seethed as his comments led him to foam lightly at the mouth.

The violent disagreement has sparked campus-wide discussions about which topics are or are not appropriate for small-talk as the university tries to cultivate a safe and caring campus environment.

"I mean, if you ask me, it was erring on the side of sleet anyway..." explained Paula Simons, bystander to the fiasco and campus blogger. "But I also see how you could mistake it for looking pretty snowy out there. My point being, you just can't bring stuff up like weather anymore! It's too ambiguous, and you never know what someone's thinking. The weather is clearly too contentious for small talk these days."

According to weather.com, it was foggy with a 60% chance of freezing rain at the time of the incident.

"Check out the biceps on that guy!!"

by Julie Walker, lactose intolerant Chemistry student

Wow. Have you seen his arms? Oooo just look at them! Look! So bulgey, and muscley, and manly, and veiny, and wonderfully sexual and raw. Damn. Hot damn. Like, holy fuck, his arms really make me want to bang him. Wooweee. He's so hot. I'm sweating. Oh my gosh, can he see me sweating? I bet his arms look great when he's sweating.

He's so hot. I just love a guy with great arms.

Counter-Point

"Ehh, I'm more of a balls girl."

by Paulina Sanders, dog lover

I know muscles are sexy, manly, veiny, yada yada, but let's be real... The sexiest part of a guy is his dick. That's what he uses to have sex. That being said, I'm a balls girl. Honestly, all I crave is a nice package, but I'm supposed to be into arms or abs or some shit like that. Guys are allowed to be "boobs guys" or "tits guys", but I'm never allowed to stand up, point at someone in public, whistle, and say "NIIICE BAAALLS, YO!!" But when I'm checking a guy out, that's all I'm looking for. But yeah, sure, his arms look nice hanging there, too.

WASH U BIAS REPORT BLOTTER

Here's a sampling of some of the most recent entries from the new Washington University online bias report form. Make sure to read them all with equal care... You wouldn't want to favor one over another!

Taste Stereotyping

1:20 PM Wednesday, January 22nd - DUC Servery

Victim was ordering a burger at the 1853 Diner in the DUC. Upon approaching the register the victim was presumed to desire fries with their burger. When asked the offending question, the victim responded "Do I look like I want fries with that?! You are so inconsiderate, I have a potato intolerance!!" Suspect description: "one of the workers, I can't tell them apart."

Browser Selection

5:35 PM, Sunday, January 26

With clear bias, suspect Max Finkelberg prefers using Internet Explorer as opposed to Chrome or Firefox. Finkelberg reportedly refused to consider the merits of the alternatives, such as rich customization extensions, compatibility with more websites, and private browsing options, as he stuck with his bigoted Microsoft ways.

Sampling Bias

3:45 PM Wednesday, January 22nd - Biology Building

Dr. Marianne Clark, Ph.D., is allegedly guilty of selection bias in her study Allozyme Diversity in Lumbricus Terrestris (Common Earthworm) for taking worms from only her front yard. Clark's sampling mistake made the worms in the backyard feel bad and sub-wormy.

Disgusting Display of Heteronormativity

10:22 AM Tuesday, January 21st - 162 McDonnell Hall

Professor Obukhov spewed his hateful, backwards view that children need a mom and dad to a class of eighty students, literally erasing the experiences of families with single or same sex parents everywhere. The professor was removed from the room in handcuffs by the Bias Police shortly after daring to utter that "a zygote is formed out of gametes from the mother and father." Students emotionally affected by the incident are invited to take part in the public shaming of the ex-doctor that will take place on Mudd field this Friday. Bring your rotten tomatoes.

Racial Profiling

12:15 AM, Tuesday, January 28 - Mike Duffy's Pub & Grill

While standing up on a table, waving a mixed cranberry-vodka beverage, and belting Christina Aguilera's "Dirrrty" in her favorite crop top last Tuesday night, junior Karina Tyler was labeled as "white girl wasted" by passersby at the bar. Karina, a Chicago native who takes pride in her Irish ancestry, was appalled at the blatant disregard and disrespect for her ethnic roots. Karina reported the event as biased, especially considering that the other white girls "weren't even as wasted as she was that night".

Microbe Aggression

1:34 PM, Friday, January 24

The hundreds of thousands of microbes living on Grace Shin's hands fell victim to her aggressive use of Purell antibacterial hand sanitizer. Little did Grace know that the majority of the microbes were actually quite harmless, doing nothing at all to threaten her immune system. The systematic sterilization and destruction of microbes dates to the 1890s when anti-septic behavior became socially acceptable. Microbes everywhere finally taking a stand against their oppression.
