

Junior Only Smokes 15 Times Over Winter Break

When the fall semester comes to a close, Washington University students look forward to Winter Break to relax, see friends and family, and, of course, smoke lots of weed. However, one student, Ryan Potters, has defied this trend, reportedly only smoking 15 times over the 24-day break. Potters, who is extremely proud of his achievement, believes he may have set the record for smoking the least over Winter Break in division three collegiate history.

"I really have to give all the credit to my hard work and discipline", said the red-eyed junior, as if he were in a trance. "Winter Break in my home town of Po[r]t Washington is basically like one giant hotbox sesh, but you just gotta believe in yourself and power through to make sure you don't succumb." Potters then went on to say how weird of a word succumb is it, and how it's kind of gay because you're basically saying "suck cum".

After much prompting, Potters divulged some of the tricks he used to stay clean. "Some nights I didn't seek it out or anything," he revealed "I mean like half of the time, I didn't even hit up my drug dealer, Xpynzz, for an eighth or even a dub, and I don't think I did more than nine bong rips over the entire vacation."

When asked if he planned to continue his sabbatical, Potters replied that he was, and that he really felt the absence from the drug made every toke more enjoyable, you know?

Potters barely even remembers what this is ...

Since the interview, Potters has kept to his strict weed recess. At the time of writing, the junior has only smoked 9 times in his two weeks being back at school.

Wash U Raises Tuition to Combat Rampant Levels of Stuck-Up Students

According to a recently published article in the New York Times, Wash U is the most all around stuck-up college in America, narrowly beating out Dartmouth this year for the top spot. This rating takes into account the percentage of students that qualify as low-income, the number of Audis on campus, and the amount that students complain about doing work, among other statistical factors.

To combat this issue, Chancellor Wrighton has decided to make a Wash U education even more expensive, as announced in an email about a raise in tuition costs this year. While at first glance the decision seems to further restrict the income range of potential students, the administration has stated that what they really intend it to do is knock the current student down a fucking peg.

When contacted for comment Chancellor Wrighton spoke of how the tuition raise would benefit the school at large saying, "Wash U has come to embody a certain standard of excellence. This tuition increase will not only make sure these snobby assholes don't ruin that, but also will make sure I still get to take my annual trip to the Seychelles" The raise in tuition will support a number of projects on campus, including "financial aid", the new building going up by the art school that doesn't seem to have a purpose, and the administration's spring break retreat in Aspen.

In response, wealthy students across campus have taken to doing what they do best: complaining. These students object to the raise in tuition as well as the cut in their weekly allowances. "My dad said this new bump in tuition means he's going to have to take away my Beemer," lamented junior Clarissa Robbins. She continued, "I just don't understand, I work so hard here, why aren't they paying ME?" On the other hand, senior Joey Banks said, "I just can't believe someone would call the kids here

The real victims of the tuition raise who are going to have to stay stuck with last year's Mac book

Continued on page 4

Buried WUunderground

Freshman gave Rush a chance; Still Prefers Pearl Jam

page 111

That One Girl From Tinder Totally Not As Hot In Person

page 5^7

Sophomore Looks Forward to BD Helping Shed Holiday Pounds

page 3.14

Joe Biden Regrets Tripping Acid at the State of the Union

The Lede

page :)

Obscure '70s Handjob Technique Makes A Surprising Come-Back: An Exposé on the Pepper-Grinder

page xvii

Junior Can't Figure Out How to Talk About Her Spiritual Journey in India Without Sounding Pretentious

Junior Anna Blaskovich has been faced with the tough problem of relating to all of her friends just how life-changing her study abroad program in Mumbai truly was. Blaskovich has had trouble conveying all the amazing details of her experiences while remaining subtle about how those same experiences make her better than everyone else.

"I always heard about these spiritual journeys on TV but I never understood how magical it would be until I went," Blaskovich told her new lab group before adding "I mean you really just had to be there."

Anna claims to have truly turned her life around while sitting by the Ulhas River, that she remarked flowed with "the waves of a billion people's hopes and goals." After hiking in the foothills of the Himalayas the previously vehement atheist admits that she truly "had never felt closer to God," and on her visit to the Ganges, Blaskovich tells that she could just sense "the auras of all people uniting in the cause of humanity," a feeling she told her friends they might get to have one day too.

Unfortunately, her findings have been less inspiring to her classmates than they were to her. "I tried to tell my friend Jill about the nobility I found in the slums around the city, and I could see her eyes just glaze

Blaskovich has completely integrated into the beautiful culture of India over. It happened to the guy who sits next to me in social psych too. I guess I just can't expect people to 'get it,' you know?"

After her first few run-ins with less-than-receptive audiences for her overseas revelations Blaskovich admits she started shortening her story a bit. "I leave out the bit where I saw the Dalai Lama from a distance you know? I only recount three of my eight days of meditation. That kind of stuff. It's definitely been helping with the eyerolls," Blaskovich admitted, though she quickly added "My friends should really try to have a more receptive consciousness."

Apparently the abridged tale has proved significantly more popular, as she was most recently overheard telling her grand-little from her sorority "Yeah, my trip was good."

Student Belatedly Decided to Give back this Holiday Season, Gives Rosetta Stone to Housekeeper

Last week, after the long winter break sophomore Jessica Harold found herself filled with the spirit of belated holiday cheer. After seeing so much kindness and hope around her at home she wanted to do something herself to give back, so Harold decided to gift Rosetta Stone's English I computer program to her South 40 House housekeeper.

In an interview Harold stated, "There was this Christmas-themed Extreme Home Make-over marathon on ABC that I saw before flying back and I was just like wow, these people are so great. I should do something like

"It's basically the perfect gift" Harold told our interviewer, "she can use it first and then it can have an even bigger impact if she sends it back to her family in Africa." Harold does not know the name of her housekeeper, and is pretty sure they have never had a conversation.

To find out more we asked ResLife for Harold's housekeeper's contact information and they reported that she was a quiet African-American woman born and raised in Detroit, named Tamara Jones. We were unable to contact Ms. Jones but the welcome note left in Jessica's bathroom from the first week of school tells us that she is currently obtaining her master's in English literature at Saint Louis University, and is working for WashU part-time in order to defray the cost of her schooling.

Harold later contacted us to inform us that she felt so great about her good deed that she decided to derail her previous summer plans and go to Africa instead. "I would like to, like, really understand the culture and teach English to children," Jessica explained. She is currently telling all of her friends about her planned trip to Africa and how great it feels to give

By popular demand, Rosetta Stone's new house-keeping edition

WUnderground

WUnderground is WashU's premier [only] satirical newspaper and should be taken about as seriously as that chick who you're kind of into poking you on Facebook. However, the news reported by this paper is completely fictitious, at least to our knowledge. Any resemblance to persons living, ailing or dead is entirely intentional.

Chiefs of Staff

Nate Blecher
President

Sam Blumkin
Editor in Chief

Mac Slone
Editor in Chief

Foreign Correspondent

Andrew Miller

Staff

Callan Coghlan

Aaron Dozzi

Jamie Gerber

Anat Gross

Clay Klein

Justin Kroll

Josh Moskow

Simon Olson

Lauren Paley

Blake Robertson

Kimball Slade

Jordan Siff

Patricia Witt

We are always recruiting new members. If you would like to write, edit, doodle, spellcheck, or post our nudes to the internet, email us at: wunderground@su.wustl.edu, like us on Facebook, and follow us on Twitter (@_WUnderground)

student union
THE STUDENT GOVERNMENT

ISSN # 1938-0089

wunderground.wustl.edu

Continued on page 4

Graduating Senior Reconsidering Moving in with Her Long-Time Boyfriend, Netflix

Despite having dated for most of college, senior Melissa Dunn has recently begun to have reservations about moving in with her significant other, Netflix. Although she still enjoys spending time with Netflix, issues with their relationship have lead Dunn to believe maybe it's better to move on rather than move in.

Dunn and Netflix first began their relationship freshman year. As an undecided major vaguely playing around with the idea of studying film and media, Dunn was looking for someone to spend her ample free time with. "I just didn't have that much to do, and we seemed to have a lot in common. So, yeah, I guess we started out as friends and it just gradually got more serious until I was spending most of my time with Netflix," Dunn reminisced.

It wasn't until recently that Dunn's friends reached out to her, concerned about her relationship. Roommate Jen Young recalls when she first noticed the problem saying, "Sure, everyone binged a little as a freshman. You just had the time, and lets face it, college is the time for that. But most people grow out of bingeing, they watch shows responsibly. Netflix was really dragging Melissa down."

Once her friends voiced their concerns, Dunn began to notice the warning signs as well. "I always knew Netflix liked to have a good time, but it wasn't until I talked to my friends that I saw Netflix was really pushing me as well." While most students report having enjoyed movies and shows several times as well and occasionally multiple episodes at a time, Netflix engages in a dangerous practice known as "auto-playing" in which shows are played continuously, leaving no time for the viewer to recover. "It got so bad that Netflix started to suggest things I wasn't even in to, and I'd still go through with it. I realized how unhealthy it got when I watched all of Marco Polo in one sitting. I mean, for fuck's sake, it has a 27% on Rotten Tomatoes," an exasperated Dunn remarked.

As of press time, Dunn is trying to figure out a way to cut ties with Netflix while already planning her next relationship. "Hulu looks nice, but I heard he's a tease. Whatever happens I know I always have Youtube lined up and waiting," remarked Dunn.

Sure he's a babe. But is he right for her?

Area Student's Welcome Back Hug Not Quite as Enthusiastic as Classmate's

Upon returning to school, local student Mike Keen was excitedly greeted by his friends, but not to the same degree as classmate, Walter Hoss. While both wayward friends were welcomed back with warm hugs, the hugs Hoss received were just a little bit warmer according to sources present at the incident.

While normal salutations among the friend group consist of fist-bumps and low-fives, after long separation a brief hug is expected. Although the bro-grab is meant to be brief, Keen noted that his were maybe a little too brief, especially when compared to Hoss's loving embraces. "On average, Walter got one more back-pat per hug. Oh and they were almost a third of a second longer than mine," Keen remembered with tears clearly forming in his eyes. "Hey, I'm not an idiot. I know freshman friend groups drift apart, and I can take a hint," Keen finished before quickly running to the bathroom.

Directly after his traumatic experience, Keen had been too dazed to completely register all the stories of how Hoss was now better at pong than all his friends back home. "The whole situation was pretty fucked. There I was faced with a gigantic rift that had just opened up between my supposed friends and me, and they were just pretending like nothing had happened," Keen later told us over a tub of Ben & Jerry's ice cream. When Keen later regaled his similar experiences with the college drinking game over break, he was simply met with a "sweet, bro" instead of Hoss's gushing adulations of "yeah totally, man."

Today, Keen is picking up the pieces of his broken life and moving on. Keen has even reported he already found some "new homies" by posting in the Washington University in St. Louis Class Of 2018 Facebook group.

Dramatic recreation of the offending hug

Point

Damn, I bet I could even give better head than my girlfriend

By Jason Lesoe

Sophomore, complaining about getting his dick sucked

I don't get it. How can someone be bad at sucking dick? Like seriously, the first time I got head it was like someone wrapped my penis in clouds made of kitten fur. And also the clouds all have mouths which were sucking my dick. But my girlfriend is more like a damp towel thats been microwaved for a bit and it clumsily flailing around in your pants. Oh, and the towel has teeth. Now I'm not saying I know from experience, but I'm fairly certain I could do a better job than her. Just based on how much worse her handjobs are than... well you get the picture. But, yeah, no, I could definitely suck dick better than her.

Counter-Point

Wait why the fuck are you asking me?

By Anderson Cooper

Respected reporter, ageless

Yes, I'm a reporter, and yes, I often editorialize with my opinions. But are you seriously asking my opinion on the matter of sucking dick? I am in no way qualified as a professional to argue this. Wait, what am I even supposed to be rebutting? That this kid would be better at sucking dick than his girlfriend? Look, this is just insulting. I wish the general public could move past categorizing professionals based on their personal identity. But, yeah, no, he's right it's pretty easy.

Oscar Nomination Snubs Raise Serious Questions

The recent release of the 2015 Oscar nominations have caused many to question the fairness of the Academy. The apparent sweeping bias across all categories have landed the Academy in hot water. Now everyone is asking the same questions.

Is the Academy too steeped in their preconceived notions of excellence that those deserving of recognition are being passed over for the more conservative but less notable? I mean why the fuck wasn't The Lego Movie nominated for Best Animated Feature Film?

That shit was the best movie of the whole goddamn year! First off, Legos are awesome. 'Nuff said. Will Ferrell was amazing as President Business, Morgan Freeman was in it which should be an award in and of itself, and Chris Pratt, like the hottest actor on the planet right now, was the main character. THAT cast and no nomination? You've got to be kidding me, Academy.

Notice anything missing?

Basically the Academy is tripping major ballsack in not nominating The Lego Movie for Best Animated Feature Film. Well, at least "Everything is Awesome" was nominated. I'm still singing that shit. "Everything is awesome! Everything is cool when you're part of a team!" See, now its stuck in your head too, and I bet you aren't even upset.

Belated Rosetta Stone Gift Continued

back. She has not yet decided on what country she will visit, but in her latest email to us she said she is "looking into Mozambique," because she heard they have great beaches, although she is "a bit concerned about the Ebola risk."

Wash U Raises Tuition to Combat Rampant Stuck-Up Students Continued

spoiled. My parents wont even replace the second iPhone I broke, and, like, I had to beg for them to even keep paying for my Netflix account!"

Wrighton also seems to be struggling with the issue. "Sometimes it's like I just can't win," he said. "I'm trying to change, but the donors are all up in my grill, and my wife says I work too much, and my kids don't understand why they're going to have to give up their Gucci loafers... It's just really hard, you know?"

The 12 low-income students on campus, however, were more ambivalent towards the change. "The increased tuition really doesn't affect our scholarships," sophomore Josie Rotini reported. "The main things I noticed were longer lines in BD these past couple weeks. I guess the increased tuition cost came out of their Ibbys' budget."

Top 10...

Top 10 New Years Resolutions You've Already Given Up On

10. Consent
9. Achieving an erection
8. Achieving anything
7. Stop answering calls from Amanda Bynes
6. Having normative sexual experiences
5. Drinking more liquor that wasn't made in a toilet
4. Not only brushing every other tooth
3. Not killing people
2. Stop screaming mom's name during sex
1. Going to the gym

What Do You Think?

The attacks Charlie Hedbo recently suffered have sparked both national and international support of France as well as reactionary hatred of Muslims. What do you think?

George W. Bush

The 43rd President but the 1st in our hearts:

"We've decided to rename freedom fries — french fries in memory of the french lives lost."

George Washington

Set most precedent for how our government behaves

"Wait, what are Muslims and should I hate them more or less than Jews?"

La Tour Eiffel

Français

"Oh-hoh-hoh ma petite chérie, sacré bleu! L'omelette du fromage, voulez-vous coucher avec moi ce soir."

The Prophet Muhammad

Peace be upon him

"Oh for fuck's sake, again?"

A Pencil

Ubiquitous character in recent editorial cartoons

"Great, so this Mohamad guy gets his picture drawn, and now my image is being exploited by cartoonists everywhere"