Hallmark Expands Valentine's Day Offerings to Include Every Possible Romantic Relationship

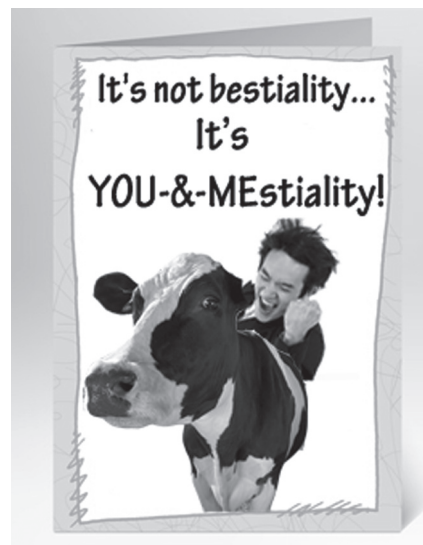

Hallmark, the largest manufacturer of greeting cards in the United States, recently announced its intention to offer a new, diversified line of Valentine's Day cards targeting the long-ignored rejects of the holiday. Citing a new era of sexual misfits, Hallmark hopes to broaden its market for the romantic holiday to cater to more complicated relationships than the typical commercialized couple.

"It's just not a good day for necrophiliacs. Nor is it for divorcees, inter-species erotics, and asexuals," says company spokesperson Tyler Gooding. "There's an untapped market here, and we're going to penetrate it like a horny fucker."

Hallmark has long been under fire for producing heart-felt, wholesome cards for an increasingly single and perverted American public. Because many Americans feel that these traditional Valentine's Day offerings aren't satisfying their needs, the influx of valentines this year featuring spiteful slogans, uncomfortably erotic designs, and angsty punk rock audio should provide a welcome change. Demand for a better way to tell your significant other that you slept with their sibling last New Year's Eve is higher than ever before, and Hallmark feels that it would simply be poor business to ignore the changing market.

Another advertising strategy intended to boost the company's sales around the holidays is a commercial campaign promoting polygamous relationships. Extensive marketing research has left Hallmark's management eighty-percent certain that if every dedicated husband purchases three cards instead of one, overall sales will likely rise.

"We at Hallmark are enthusiastic about the positive effects these products could have on our quarterly revenue," Gooding stated. "Now, are we concerned about the deranged weirdos the new cards will lure to our stores? Dear God, absolutely. But that's a risk we're willing to take."

Once again Hallmark is reminding greeting card recipients not to think too hard about the sincerity of a card that was written by a complete stranger.

Sample cards:

•(Front) Roses are red, Violets are Blue. (Inside) I need that child support by Friday, And I think you're a needy slut.

•(Front) You don't understand English... (Inside) so the content of this card is irrelevant. You're a very sexually attractive goat. Feel free to eat this card.

•(Front) I'm not attracted to you... (Inside) but don't worry, I'm not attracted to anyone.

Wrongful Conviction Rate Near 100%, According to Poll of Convicted Felons

In a study that has provided a startling wake-up call to the criminal justice system in the United States, a recent poll has found that almost every person convicted of a crime did not actually commit it. The finding, which was consistent among all crimes and jurisdictions, calls into serious question the process used to distinguish the guilty from the innocent, as hardly anyone polled during their trial revealed that they in fact committed the crime for which they would serve time.

"God, I feel awful," said St. Louis prosecutor Harold Riley, who has apparently been putting innocent men in prison for the better part of three decades. "Just last week I put a guy in jail for life because eight witnesses, DNA evidence, fingerprints, gun receipts, a past history of violent criminal behavior, and security footage suggested he had committed a murder, but now he says he didn't even do it! I guess the system just doesn't work."

Experts suggest that future trials simply ask the defendant whether or not he committed the crime in question, as after all, he would know best. The high error rate for the current system seems almost expected given that those deciding the guilt of the defendants aren't even present when the crime are committed, a system Riley calls "pretty silly, when you think about it."

Further proposed revamps of the criminal justice system include telling those committing crimes to come to the police rather than going through the arduous process of police coming to them, and a parole system that allows prisoners to leave once they feel they are properly rehabilitated.

If you're hosting...

Make sure you buy a TV before the game starts. You won't wanna have to beat the crowds at the TV store during the game!

Super Bowl Party Tips

- Too often parties run out of dip before they run out of chips. Prevent this from happening by only buying dip.
- Close games are more entertaining to watch, so make sure the game won't be a blowout before deciding to host.
- Don't invite Kevin. Trust us on this one.
- Fair weather football fans will often ask annoying questions during the game. Only invite them if they're hot.

If you're at a friend's place...

- Be a courteous guest and throw down a few bucks to your host for the food and beverages you consume, unless the bastard got Natty for the game.
- Arrive early to grab the best seat, and bring a jar so no one can swipe it while you're in the bathroom.
- It sucks to have your team lose, so be ready to change allegiances if your team's playing poorly.
- Gambling on professional football is illegal. Be sure to bring this up if you lose any bets.

If you weren't invited anywhere...

Tears make great lubrication.

The Non-Football Fan's Guide to Watching the Super Bowl

So your friends are all watching the Super Bowl together and you don't want to be left out. Problem is, you don't know the first thing about football! Fear not, with a little preparation and help from WUnderground, you'll be ready for game-time.

- Talk a lot to prove to people that you're not one of those fair weather fans that only watches the Super Bowl because everyone else is.
- Say "they've gotta play physical" sporadically during the game.
- Memorize the names of each team's left tackle and mention how he's "having a hell of a year at left tackle."
- High five your fellow viewers whenever the opportunity arises.
- Point out someone else's lack of football knowledge to throw people off the scent.

• Knowing the words to the songs played in Madonna's half-time performance might score you some points.

WUnderground Keys to the Game Giants

- Little-used special teams players should practice catching balls against their helmets, as this is what beat the Patriots in the Super Bowl last time.
- Covering the spread would be great, but get ambitious and try to win the game too, if possible.
- Compared to teams like the Falcons, Packers, and 49ers, beating the Patriots should be...approximately as difficult. So...yeah.
- Eli Manning, having looked impressive throwing every pass for the Giants this season, should get the start at quarterback over David Carr.

Patriots

- The heat's died down from that whole cheating thing, right? Maybe try that again.
- Punter Zoltan Mesko led the league this season in net punting yards among players named Zoltan. Take advantage of this.
- Quarterback Tom Brady is married to supermodel Gisele Bundchen. Not sure how this will help them, but fuck, that's awesome.
- They seem to be good at beating the Broncos, so ask them if they'd like to play in the Super Bowl instead of the Giants.

I Promise This Nation Strong Family Values, A Cutback on Big Government, and if it Comes Down to it, Blowjobs for Undecided Voters

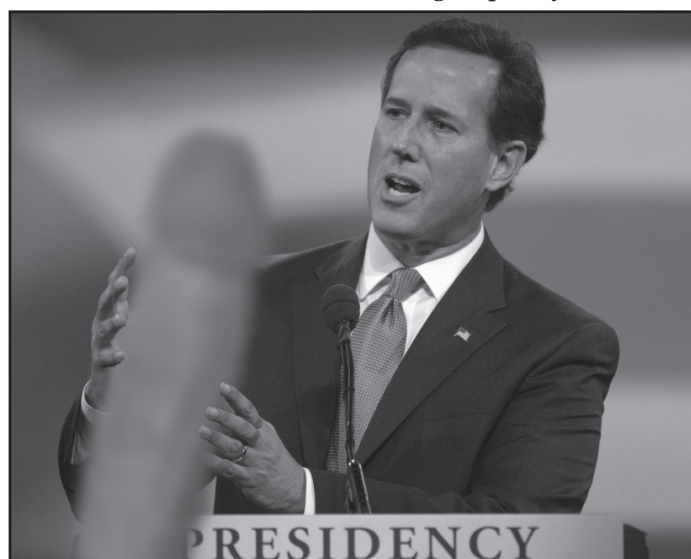

by Rick Santorum

As the race for the Republican nomination heats up with state primaries approaching every few weeks, it's time for America to realize once and for all that I, Rick Santorum, am the ideal candidate for President of this great country. If elected, I will help restore our country's moral backbone by a return to conservative family values, lower the national debt by shrinking government without raising taxes, and to sweeten the deal, I'll even throw in blowjobs for those who vote for me. I mean seriously, what other candidate is offering that?

Admittedly, my candidacy is looking pretty bleak at the moment. I'll be the first to acknowledge that having less than a third of the secured delegates of Romney and Gingrich is not exactly an encouraging sign, but that's all the more reason to rally support now! A brighter future less burdened with debt and social discord is all within reach simply by spreading the word about Rick Santorum for president. And hey, getting head isn't bad either, am I right?

Ultimately, America needs to ask itself the tough questions. Which candidate's foreign policy plan will be able to adapt to an ever-changing international landscape while ensuring the security of American citizens both at home and abroad? Do you really want a president named "Newt" or "Mitt"? How horny are you right now?

A few people have been asking about the logistics regarding the whole blowjob thing. One per person, but the key thing is you only get one if you were previously undecided about voting for me. If you were going to vote for me anyway, thanks for the support but no blowjob for you. I'm a busy man, after all. I intend to complete all blowjobs by the end of my first term in office, so please be patient. Those who die before they receive their blowjobs can have it passed down to the next oldest male heir. All blowjobs will be administered by me, Rick Santorum, President of the United States. Female voters will not receive any genital stimulation so as to protect the sanctity of my marriage.

So when you go to the polls for the primary elections do what's best for the country and your penis. Vote Rick Santorum.

POINT

Westboro Baptist Church is a Loathsome Organization Who Shouldn't Have the Right to Spread Their Hate

by Kyle Torrins, junior

With the highly controversial Westboro Baptist Church coming to our area in the next couple weeks, the issue of whether or not they should be able to speak and demonstrate is a hot topic. While I'm all for freedom of religion and protecting Americans' First Amendment rights, the WBC simply goes too far in their message of inciting violence and spreading misery and should thus not be allowed to operate freely. Unlike other organizations who speak out publicly in attempts to communicate their message to others, effect change pertaining to their individual values, and increase awareness for certain issues, Westboro Baptist pickets funerals and the like for the sole purpose of causing pain. If their message was even a little tempered and restricted to just espousing their conservative and even highly bigoted viewpoints, I would be fine about granting them free rein, but that simply isn't the case. When an organization is this hateful and malicious, it should be the government's duty to protect its citizens by not allowing them to demonstrate.

COUNTER-POINT

Goddammit, I Have to Write Supporting the Westboro Baptist Church

by Richie Silver, freshman

Well this is fucking great. Just my fucking luck. I finally get a big writing assignment to be printed in the paper and my task is to write an opinion piece supporting Westboro Baptist Church. Jesus fucking Christ, that's literally the worst topic you could possibly get. I mean have you seen these guys? They're fucking nuts! My uncle is friends with a woman whose funeral got picketed by these fuckers and he says it was one of the most awful, miserable, and infuriating experiences of his life. I'm supposed to defend those jackasses? I mean yeah, I could spout some First Amendment bullshit and argue that speech needs to be defended no matter what the content but even the most compelling argument would still make me come across as Richie Silver, WBC fanboy. Fuck that! I'm pretty much as liberal as they come, this is so unfair. I'm gonna go masturbate in protest now.

State of the Union – Leaked First Draft

by Barack Obama

My fellow Americans, it's that time again. Time for my annual State of the Union address. That's when I talk to you about what kind of state the country is in. Normally I would begin such a speech with a long-winded, optimistic preamble about how the country is continually improving and its citizens are strong-willed, loyal, and true. I would go on about what we're doing to correct America's faults and how we're on our way to a better tomorrow. However, after three years of spewing that angle to you guys, I've decided this year to tell it like it is, which is this: we are royally fucked.

Yeah, that's right, the president just said fucked. There I said it again. Fucked. I use that word because it is the only one of the 171,000 words that comprise the English language that accurately and sufficiently describes the current state of the United States of America. Fucked.

Sure, you've read the news and you're aware of the issues the country has right now. A national debt bigger than anyone can properly fathom. A social rift between liberals and conservatives impeding progress in the legislature and dividing the populace of the country. An ongoing war that continues to kill Americans and foreigners while draining the nation of much-needed resources. You know the United States has problems. But you don't know the fucking half of it.

I wish those things were all that was wrong with our country. The kind of shit I have to deal with as president makes those bush-league problems seem like fucking child's play. I know things that would make you move to Canada so fast you'd be there before the paint was dry on your For Sale sign. You wanna know what's really fucked up? I know things that would make you want to move to Mexico, too. Yea. Ever heard of a country called Iran? Yea. Scary fucking shit.

I probably shouldn't even be telling you this stuff. Goodness knows your puny brains aren't equipped to handle the information. That's the main reason you all are so fucked in the first place – Americans are stupid, stupid, stupid, stupid people. I used the word stupid four times there because the more accurate figure of 87 would take up too much time. Only half of U.S. adults can name all three branches of government for Christ's sake! And these are the people whose votes determine the country's future? Dear Lord.

I know I was elected president of this country with a message of hope, and you're probably hoping for some sort of inspirational, uplifting close to my address that will leave you with a feeling of optimism even in the face of all these issues. Well, sorry about that.

King's College Department of War Studies Absorbs Polish Language Department, Sets Sights on Department of European and International Studies

By Jeff Leibovich, Senior Foreign Correspondent

LONDON, UNITED KINGDOM— The Department of War Studies at King's College London announced today that it has assumed control of the University's Polish Department, effective immediately.

"This is a proud day not only for students, faculty, and staff in the War Studies Department, but for those in the Polish Department as well," proclaimed War Studies Department Chair and Supreme Chancellor Klaus Von Bimmler. "Today we take one great step toward the unification of our university and the creation of the master department."

Von Bimmler added that leaders of the War Studies Department would now turn their attention to gaining control of the Department of European and International Studies. He also warned students to avoid enrolling in any courses offered by the Jewish Studies Department, which he blames for the University's current economic struggles and a wide range of other problems.
