

Citing Hazing Concerns, Overly Cautious Greek Life Office Bans Fun

In a controversial move designed to combat hazing, the Greek Life Office (GLO) officially banned fun yesterday for all Greek organizations. The decision, which is expected to reduce hazing by as much as "somewhat," goes into effect immediately, with particular emphasis being placed on the new member initiation period currently taking place. While GLO officials admit that fun can be pretty fun, they stress that fraternity and sorority members can find other ways to enjoy their Greekdom such as through charity work, chapter meetings, paying dues, and dry mixers, none of which are the least bit fun.

"Oh, don't look so surprised," said GLO president Jeffrey Wortz in response to Greek students upset by the decision. "Anyone the least bit familiar with our organization should've seen this coming years ago."

Women's Panhellenic Association members privy to the situation say that a certain "bran muffin calamity" may have contributed to the ruling. Witnesses report that last Tuesday sometime before dawn, a new sorority member received a gift of bran muffins and black licorice outside her dorm room. The "thoughtless gift" looked particularly bleak compared to the gifts of red velvet cupcakes, Godiva chocolate bars, and rainbow lollipops that she claims her new sorority sisters received the same morning. The egregious hazing did not go over well with the GLO.

"That bran muffin shit was the last fucking straw," vented Susan Preston, an unmarried, unattractive, middle-aged GLO representative. "If I were a camel, which I'm not, it would have broken my god-damned arthritic back. I can't even fathom the nerve some two-faced, ill-intentioned sorority bitch must have had to torture a new member with fiber-infused baked goods like that. I mean it's just an icky, icky food."

Preston cited the bran muffin disaster as one example of "baked-goods-inequity," a rampant hazing problem whose effects she expects to include long-term anxiety, uneven weight gain amongst sorority sisters, and in rare circumstances, syphilis. However, Preston maintains that the crooked baked goods distribution is only the tip of the iceberg.

"Drinking with new members? Yeah right, I'll go ahead and let that happen the next time I get laid, and that outlook seems pretty fucking bleak," Preston said. "Older sorority sisters buying alcohol for newbies just because they're new to the sorority? Doesn't sound like a level playing field to me. It's hazing, it's fun, I don't like it. No longer allowed."

Corresponding to the complete abolition of the gift-giving and fun rituals associated with the new member period, the GLO is advising against acknowledging or greeting new members in any way, as this falls under the umbrella of hazing, which is loosely defined as "interacting with new members." This initiative will ensure that new members never feel suffocated or overly included in their sororities. The GLO strongly believes that if sororities can eventually adjust to completely ignore new members, there will be zero potential for future hazing conflict or fun.

For more information regarding the new anti-hazing regulations and a step-by-step guideline on "How to Finally Tell Your New Member She is Only a Baby in the Metaphorical Sense," visit the GLO's website.

The Offending Baked Goods

Anonymous Gifts to Sorority Pledge Actually From Creepy Guy In Math Class

The various items sorority pledge Lisa Mendelson has been receiving over the past week were revealed to be from an unattractive male member of her calculus class and not, as she had thought, from her sorority pledge mom. The gifts, which were left at the door of her dorm room, dropped in her mailbox, and delivered to her by messengers, bore many similarities to those received by other members of her pledge class, but turned out to be from a drastically different and far sketchier source. Meanwhile, Mendelson's actual pledge mom, Chloe Robinsky, did not in fact give her anything, having forgotten altogether that she was assigned a pledge daughter.

"Oh shit..." Robinsky said upon being reminded of the girl she was supposed to be lavishing with the material manifestations of burgeoning sisterhood. "Yea, definitely forgot about that."

The gifts started out small according to Mendelson, with chocolate and balloons. She began to grow suspicious, however, when she received a calculator and a t-shirt reading "I have an imaginary friend" with a square root of negative one on it. What really convinced her however was the note that read "Please go out with me - Jerry from math class (the guy with the curly hair)."

"When I read the note, I became really confused and I was pretty sure that something odd was going on," Mendelson said. "There's no one in the sorority in my math class, and

Buried WU_{nderground}

Hilarious New Study Finds Drunk Whales Remarkably Difficult to Distinguish From Sober Whales

page 320

"I'm not crazy like every other girl" Says Every Girl

page 141z

Passive Protesters were Arrested by Grammar Police

page 6:10-25

Bros Sharing Couch Agree to Ignore Fact that Their Leg Hair Tenderly Brushed Together and Sort of Tickled

page LXVII

Boobs More Interesting Than Women, Study Finds

page 1 ¾

Sophomore Much Less Fun Since Getting Penis Cut Off, Friends Notice

page j30

there's also no one from the sorority named Jerry. In fact, the only guy I know named Jerry is that guy from my math class. Oh shit, the note is probably from Jerry from my math class..."

Sources say Jerry from Mendelson's math class is the most likely source of the gifts, given that he does not have a firm grasp on social customs when it comes to courting the opposite sex, and the fact that he signed his name on the note.

Now that the truth is out however, Mendelson feels she can move on with her life. "My real mother is a deadbeat as well, so I can live with it," she said.

As of press time, Jerry has zero chance of getting with her.

Muggings Down Since Junior Went Abroad, Campus Notices

In the time elapsed since junior Keith Meyer left the country for a semester in Madrid nearly two months ago, muggings and other violent crimes have seen a significant decline, members of the campus community observed. While officials are not making any claims with regards to a causal connection between these two occurrences, WUPD police chief Don Strom admitted it was “a little fishy.”

“Was Keith responsible for every single crime committed last semester?” Strom asked reporters in a press conference yesterday. “Well there’s certainly no proof of that. But we’ll certainly be interrogating him intensely as soon as he sets foot back in the United States.”

“He’d better hope someone here gets mugged real soon,” Strom added.

The slowly dawning realization that Meyer may be responsible for over twelve separate violent crimes has sharply divided the campus into those who are convinced of his guilt and those who are merely “pretty sure” of his guilt. The very slight uncertainty regarding the true perpetrator of last semester’s crimes has led police to look into Meyer’s possible criminal actions across the pond. While statistics on Madrid’s crime rate over the past two months are not yet available, police have discovered a 28-year-old man who was murdered in Barcelona, a city in the same country as Madrid.

“Wait, Keith is murdering people now?” said sophomore George McElroy, an acquaintance of Meyer. “Geez, you think you know someone...”

Chancellor Wrighton has placed the campus on high alert effective immediately, should Meyer be planning a remote aerial strike from his terrorist headquarters in Madrid. Wrighton warns the campus community that even from 4,500 miles away, Meyer is armed and extremely dangerous, and he will kill you in your sleep, possibly even tonight.

“Goodbye, friends and colleagues,” Wrighton said in a tearful farewell address to the university before the impending mass bombing that will kill every last student and faculty member at WashU. “It’s been a wonderful experience serving you, and I pray that in death we may—what’s that? Someone just got mugged? Whoops, never mind. Press conference over.”

Ladies! Valentine’s Day may be over, but that’s no reason to stop putting the spice back in your relationship! Here are WUnderground’s bona fide top ways to drive your man crazy!

- Tease him: Take charge in bed. Next time you’re getting down and dirty with your man, take out his member and say: “I’m not going to suck this.” Then totally don’t.
- Show him you care: Show your man how important he is to you by calling every woman in his contact list and giving them a fun little death threat.
- Put lead in his food: Heavy metals inhibit proper nervous system function, leading to various neurological problems—try spicing up a drab old recipe with some!
- Murder an infant: Most men think their girlfriends have baby fever. Prove your man wrong by stabbing a baby in front of him.

- Rearrange his things: Your special guy works hard; keep his routine fresh by moving around his possessions while he’s away—enough that he’ll notice a difference but not so much that he suspects what you’re doing!
- Be fickle: Change your mind about something—a lot! Men love that!
- Get a sex change operation, get it reversed the next day, deny everything: Admittedly, we’ve never tried this one before but we’ve got a pretty good feeling about it.
- Speed blowjobs: Treat your man with the fastest blowjob in blowjob history! It’ll be so fast, he won’t even ejaculate! He’ll barely even feel anything, it’ll be so brief! Talk about efficient!

- Cede power (with moderation): Give your guy the authority by saying you don’t care where you eat so he can pick. But don’t let him feel too important, so make sure to passive-aggressively criticize his choice.
- Get physical: Use a whole new spin on “rough” foreplay and incorporate sandpaper in the bedroom.
- Be yourself: Sometimes your biggest asset is hidden in plain sight. Never underestimate your ability to drive your man wild by simply spending time with him.

Thousands of Years after Inventing Democracy, Greeks Realize Something Has Gone Horribly Wrong

By Jeff Leibovich, Senior Foreign Correspondent

ATHENS, GREECE—Over 2,500 years after the Greeks first made headlines for their bold political experiment known as “democracy,” Prime Minister Lucas Papademos made explicit today what many had long suspected, that whatever fucked up democratic structure is sustaining the Greek government at the moment is certainly not what its founders had intended. Not by a long shot.

“I just...I just don’t know what happened,” Papademos confessed at a press conference yesterday afternoon in Athens. “One day we’re writing philosophy, holding elections, and laying the foundations for all of modern western civilization, and the next we’re rioting and in complete fiscal disarray.” Papademos concluded the conference by asking if anybody in attendance could spare him 3 Euros for the cab ride home.

While no one knows exactly how the crisis all began, a growing number of disillusioned Greeks have begun to look back into the country’s past for answers.

“Our government’s social policies have been out of line for years,” said Nikola Kostapolous, a recently retired 50 year-old shopkeeper who has not paid his taxes in thirty years. “Things have been going downhill ever since they decided to execute Socrates.”

Others, including the tax-evading 40 year-old doctor Anastia Dimosteas, argue that Greece’s debt stems from the fact that the government has been spending beyond its means for thousands of years. “They never should have blown all that money on building the Acropolis,” she said. “Fat lot of good that’s doing us now.”

Political experts however, maintain that the heart of the problem lies in the institution of democracy itself, which they call “pretty stupid, when you think about it.”

While they’re unsure of how exactly society functioned in ancient times, the popular consensus is that whatever tranquility and productivity was sustained back then was probably due to the plethora of orgies that were common at the time, not democracy.

“It just doesn’t work,” says University of Crete political science professor Karolos Palipeas. “People deciding things? People are idiots! You’re an idiot, I’m an idiot, we’re all idiots. Especially you.”

Despite the hard times however, Prime Minister Papademos remains optimistic. Citing the clear failure of democracy as a political structure, he suggests the country try “dicking around with other systems,” such as monarchy, oligarchy, “or maybe even fascism for shits and giggles.”

“We will emerge from this crisis stronger and more powerful than ever, or at least I will,” he said. “And if we don’t, I will unilaterally execute those responsible so fast, it’ll make your head spin.”

WUnderground

WUnderground is WashU’s premier [only] satirical newspaper and should be taken about as seriously as a clown on April Fool’s day. The news reported by this paper is completely fictitious, at least to our knowledge. Any resemblance to persons living, ailing or dead is entirely intentional.

Chiefs of Staff

Zack Pinsky
Editor in Chief

Emily Zalla
Chief of Adobe InDesign

David Drucker
Web God

Aleya Broadway
Bobby Harvey
Ghost of Chiefs Past

Staff

Nate Blecher
Co-Manager of Journalistic Integrity

Brian Cizek
Boss of Buffoonery

David Drucker
President of Humor Operations

Andrew Luskin
Duke of Drollery

Whitney Mann
Head Joke Consultant

Corie Miller
Chief Funniness Advisor

Clare Mulligan
Premier of Shittiness-Preventing

Marc Niemeyer
Baron of Badassery

Xiaoyin Qiao
Duchess of Newspaper-Publishing

Aaron Senser
Senior Undersecretary of Satire

Rosie Shanley
Chairman of Comedy Writing

Foreign Correspondents

Jeff Leibovich
Alix Marson
Carol Stoll

We are always recruiting new chiefs. If you would like to write, edit, doodle, spellcheck or flaunt it, girl, email us at: wunderground@su.wustl.edu, and join our facebook group!

student union
your student government

ISSN # 1938-0089

wunderground.wustl.edu

Washington University Police Blotter

courtesy of the Washington University Police Department

COCKBLOCKING

Feb. 26th, 1:34 AM

Location: Upper Row

Summary: A male student was talking to his friend for an extended period of time while his friend was clearly macking on this hot chick. She totally would've made out with him too.

Disposition: Cockblocking student has been expelled from the university.

DRUG POSSESSION

Feb. 24th, 3:42 PM

Location: Dardick House

Summary: Two students were caught in possession of an ounce of some dank-ass weed. They had this sick bong too, like it was crazy. I took one rip and was fucking done, it was awesome. Have you ever had Bear's Den cheesecake while high? It's like why would I ever eat anything else? Oh my gosh, so good, dude.

Disposition: Cleared.

NOT HAVING SEEN BACK TO THE FUTURE

Feb. 23rd, 8:37 PM

Location: Gregg House

Summary: Wait, you haven't seen Back to the Future? Are you kidding me, bro? This is a joke. Right? Literally everyone has seen it. 88 miles per hour? C'mon! Who are you???

Disposition: Dude, we have to watch it right now. It's the best movie ever made, I'm not even kidding.

DAT ASS

Feb. 23rd, 2:27 PM

Location: Brookings Quadrangle

Summary: DAMMMMNNNNNNN GIIRRRRLLLLL!!! You fine as hell! That's gotta be illegal.

Disposition: Back it up.

COMPLETELY FUCKING UP HIGH-FIVE

Feb. 22nd, 11:47 AM

Location: Whispers Café

Summary: Two male students were seen exchanging the most pitiful high-five ever attempted. As they neared each other at arm's length, the first student raised an open hand while the second enthusiastically extended his fist. In a pathetic effort to correct the gesture, the first student brought his hand down and grasped the second student's fist like a doorknob. The two then stood there awkwardly while onlookers cringed at the fucked up handshake/fist-bump bastard child that they had just witnessed.

Disposition: Look at the elbows next time, seriously.

MOOCHING

Feb. 19th, 1:23 AM

Location: Bear's Den

Summary: True or False, you had the opportunity to buy yourself tater tots about five minutes ago but decided not to because you "weren't hungry". Oh, true you say? Well that's interesting, because based on the rate you're shoveling my food down your throat, I'd say you're pretty fucking hungry. When I said you could have one I meant ONE, asshole. No. Actually I meant zero. Zero tots. Because these are MY tots. And you should have known that from the way I begrudgingly said yes. You disgust me.

Disposition: Cut the shit and buy your own fucking tots next time like an adult.

SMOKING ON CAMPUS

Feb 18th 11:24 PM

Location: Simon Hall

Summary: Student was smoking a cigarette on campus. Remember how WashU is tobacco-free now? C'mon guys, I don't want to be the bad guy, here. Just finish it and put them away, please? Just step onto the grass on Forsyth, you're allowed to do it there!

Disposition: God, this tobacco ban is a bitch.

ASKING PROFESSOR AN IRRELEVANT STRING OF QUESTIONS AT THE END OF CLASS

Feb 17th, 3:01 PM

Location: LabSci 300

Summary: An annoying student postponed the start of his peers' weekend after asking the professor a string of completely irrelevant personal and hypothetical questions at the end of his intro level chemistry class. Nobody cares, you stupid jackass! It's Friday, dude! Come on!

Disposition: Four years of solitary confinement with no chance of getting laid.

TAKING FORFUCKINGEVER

February 16th, 12:13 PM

Location: Holmes Lounge

Summary: A student was charged with neglecting to consider what she wanted to order until reaching the front of the line during peak Holmes hours, holding the rest of the line up in an egregious act of douchebaggery. The 19-year-old in question allegedly spent two full minutes debating which sauce to get, reportedly remaining oblivious to her offenses throughout the whole ordeal despite several exaggerated exhales from onlookers farther back in line. Bystanders reported wanting to stab themselves in the hand to distract from the pain of the whole interaction.

Ruling: Death by firing squad.

With prospective freshmen visiting ever more frequently as the admissions season heats up, WUnderground's got you covered with...

Hooking Up With Pre-Frosh Scoring Chart

20	points per year of age difference
-300	points if they're an undercover cop
35	points if you're mentioned in a facebook status afterwards
50	points if it's someone's little sister
-100	points if it's your little sister
-250	points if you fall in love
30	points if they decide not to come here anymore
200	points if their parents are with them
5	points for every minute he lasts

POINT

I Feel Like John Only Volunteered to Write the Counterpoint for this Issue in Order to Disagree with Me

by Colin Dunlevy, junior

Is it just me or has John been acting really weird towards me lately? It seems like he's been holding a grudge against me for some time now, but I can't for the life of me figure out why and he refuses to speak to me directly. I've got nothing against the guy, so I'm puzzled as to why he would act this way. It's really affecting our professional relationship. The entire editorial staff at WUnderground is usually pretty tight, and it makes for a productive team atmosphere. Now it's just weird. Usually John hates writing point/counterpoints, but after I volunteered to write one side, he jumped at the opportunity! Did anyone else notice that? I'd just like to move past whatever the issue is and get back to good terms before it results in any problems, like really stupid newspaper content, for example.

COUNTER-POINT

No Colin, You Idiot, I Love Writing Counterpoints

by John Robbins, senior

Wrong again, Colin! That's not at all why I volunteered to write this counterpoint! If you weren't so stupid you might know that I love writing counterpoints, and in fact I totally didn't even know that you'd be writing the other side. So suck on that, buttmunch! I don't know what you're talking about, anyway. I haven't been acting weird towards you at all. I'm not holding any grudge against you, but if I were I'm sure you'd be able to figure out why since we talk all the time, usually directly. I think the real issue is that you have something against me.

Not that it matters much anyway, as it doesn't affect our professional relationship. Even though the editorial staff is pretty dysfunctional, you and I get along great. No one else noticed anything because it's common knowledge that I love writing counterpoints. You're stupid.

Man on PCP Accidentally Eats Wife and Kids; Feels "Pretty Silly" About It

In what officials are calling a "bone-head move," area man Colin Browerson (pictured at left) accidentally ate his wife and kids last week while high on PCP. The accidental gaffe, which Browerson says "in retrospect I probably shouldn't have done," was discovered by the sober Browerson twelve hours later, at which time he realized how much of a doofus he had been during his bender the day before. Police are letting him off with a warning.

"So I woke up the next morning and went out for some lunch, and I kind of wondered where Wanda and the kids were," explained Browerson to police while shaking his head and chuckling. "Then I go in the living room and find three gnawed corpses on the ground. Guess I figured out where they were!" he finished to general laughter.

Experts say that such lapses in judgement are common while high on drugs, and that had it not been for the PCP ingestion, Browerson probably wouldn't have eaten his wife and kids. They therefore recommend eating a full meal before taking the drug, or else risk facing the tragic, albeit kinda hilarious consequences.

"Bottom line is, do your best not to commit triple murder while high on PCP, but we understand nobody's perfect," says Food and Drug Administration illicit drug expert Donald Rolf. "At the end of the day, it's not like you're gonna quit doing PCP just because of some small chance at killing your family so just try to be a bit careful about it."

While some disciplinarian types are calling for Browerson to be punished for his actions with community service hours, police do not plan on taking such action.

"We all do dumb shit when we're fucked up," says Harry Fairchild, an officer in the St. Louis police department. "Last week I spilled a beer all over my girlfriend's new blouse. Stuff like that just happens."

The contrite Browerson told reporters he does not plan on doing any more PCP until after the funerals out of respect for his family, and also because that is when his dealer will likely have more in stock. He says that while he'd be "all for" his family still being alive, their deaths are "not worth getting all bent out of shape over."

"I never said in my wedding vows that I wasn't going to eat her," he points out. "It's one of those things that's kind of unfortunate now, but we'll all be laughing about in a year."

Browerson plans on freezing the uneaten remains to avoid spoilage.

Students Excited to be Disappointed by WILD Reveal

In what many view as a biannual rite of passage in the WashU experience, students once again are eagerly anticipating the crushing disappointment they will soon feel when the artists are revealed for Spring WILD 2012. While a few students worry that this will finally be the semester when a good artist is revealed, completely ruining all the complaining they had planned to do, most are confident that this semester will be nothing new.

"I mean Major Lazer wasn't even here last year," gushed senior Tracy Cunningham reminiscently. "I can't wait to see who's gonna fuck up this time!"

Junior Holly Maroney was similarly disenchanted with past talent. "White Panda? I would have been more excited about Panda Express," she said. "It would have been twice as satisfying and my night would have ended with the same amount of vomiting."

In response to the rampant criticism regarding artist selection, Team 31, the student group responsible for putting on WILD, has announced big changes for this semester's concert. According to a recent poll, 3% of students enjoyed last year's headliner, but 98% enjoyed the pizza. Consequently, Team 31 will be moving the pizza to the main stage and the band to the back of the quad where the equipment won't get in the way of the food. Students have been quick to complain about the move.

"Pizza on the main stage? Psh. They should parachute the pizza down from the sky," said senior Lucas Bradley. "Failed again, Team 31."

Students are advised to practice booing for the reveal, which will take place after spring break.

Top 10...

JOKES THAT ARE NO LONGER TOO SOON

10. Cain and Abel Jokes
9. The Obama Assassination
8. The Spanish Inquisition
7. Leprosy
6. Vincent Van Gogh's Syphilis
5. That one time Jimmy hit his nuts real hard
4. That time my fern died when I forgot to water it
3. Dobby's death
2. Dinosaur Extinction (Jurassic Period, NOT Cretaceous)
1. Bear Mart FroYo malfunction, October 2007

What Do You Think?

Jeremy Lin! WDYT?

Todd Royal
Junior

"I never knew Jackie Chan was so good at basketball!"

Colin Jenkins
Sophomore

"Finally, a successful person out of Harvard!"

Fortune Cookie
Traditional Chinese cookie only found in the U.S.

"The otter frolics most when the Eastern breeze blows swift. 2, 11, 24, 34, 39"

Jeremy Lin's Parents

"38 points vs. Lakers? Why not 39? Not doctor yet? Still ashamed! How come you never call home anymore?"

George Washington
first U.S. President, dental nightmare

"He's LINching the competition!" *

*(Our most racist pun yet!)