

Relay For Life Funds Study to Test Effectiveness of Relay For Life in Fighting Cancer

In recent years, Relay For Life, an annual fundraising event organized by the American Cancer Society, has faced questions from skeptics regarding its efficacy in combatting cancer. Participants have historically employed circular walking as their main weapon to fight the fatal disease, but have also used chanting and camaraderie for good measure. However, with cancer killing nearly 8 million people last year alone despite committed relay efforts, critics wonder if walking might better annihilate trans-fat calories or shoe sole rubber than a DNA-mutating disease.

"I would just like to see some evidence that what I'm doing is effective before I go out there and expend energy again," says 338-pound Relay cynic Geoff

Palmer. "I'm reluctant to stand up unless I have a very good reason."

Supporters were quick to defend the fundraiser against such skepticism.

"It might look like we're just walking in circles here with our efforts," explained Relay for Life participant Kaitlyn Solomon, "but it's really more of an oval."

In order to put these criticisms to rest, Relay for Life allocated 70% of funds raised at last year's relay toward substantiating the effectiveness of the fundraiser via experiment. A spokesperson for Relay added that the majority of the leftover funds would be spent on purchasing purple shirts, purple sunglasses, purple drank, purple nurple, and three purple people eaters.

In the experiment, researchers set up two identical Relay for Life tracks. One track was circled endlessly by participants in typical Relay for Life fashion, and the second track served as a placebo and featured no relaying, walking, or circular movement of any sort. Participants from both tracks fundraised prior to the event, and results showed a statistically insignificant difference in cancer-fighting between the two tracks. The American Cancer Society deemed the study flawed, and vowed to dedicate all the money raised from the next five years' Relays toward replicating it.

In the meantime, participants at this year's Relay plan on staying the course, and walking in as many circles as it takes before cancer is cured or they have to pee, whichever comes first.

Modern medicine in action.

In Revolutionary Study, WU Researchers Discover Girls Don't Poop

Last week, WashU scientists published results from a $1.3 million study confirming that female members of the homo genus do not defecate, or in B-school pre-school terms, girls don't poop. The report is heralded as one of the biggest "Duh..." findings of the last quarter century right alongside of "Teens with autism face major obstacles to social life outside of school, study finds" (see news.wustl.edu for the actual story).

Women across campus were quick to discredit the finding that uncovered the secret that they've hidden from men for thousands of years, but none of them were willing to poop in front of us as proof. Junior Marylyn Voges instead asked, "Well if girls don't poop, then what are all the bathrooms for?" At this point, any answer is purely speculative, but experts believe that behind those doors lies a Narnia-esque fantasy world with unicorns and butterflies. Either that or they're for peeing.

Other skeptics of the study point to Two Girls One Cup as possible refuting evidence, but James Bannes, the researcher behind the landmark investigation, was quick to point out that that was just an internet video, and thus bears as much scientific weight as a Creationism textbook. Bannes then laughed at the skeptics for admitting that they had seen Two Girls One Cup.

In a press release, Bannes and his team went on to add that their efforts now are turned to figuring out why girls go to the bathroom together. Preliminary results seem to indicate that girls are in fact talking about your penis size.

The study noted importantly however that men do poop.

Buried WUUnderground

Relay For Life Participants Accidentally Walk in Wrong Direction around Track; Cancer Grows Stronger

page S14

Rabbis Declare Only Flaccid Blowjob Kosher for Passover

page 8/20

Narcissistic Cancer Patient Relays Only for Himself

page MDXII

Priests to Offer Free Prostate Exams for Freshmen Only

page 18.5

"I'm looking for a university with a big student-run carnival" Says No Prospective Freshman

page 10:12-13

President Obama Picks Moist Manatees to Win WashU A League Intramural Soccer Championship

page 12

WashU Designs Eye-Catching Shirts to Help Identify Hard-to-Spot Pre-Frosh

With acceptance letters now out, visits to campus by prospective freshmen are in full swing. However, the polo-wearing, parent-entangled youngsters have, to date, been hard to spot around campus given only WashU-emblazoned folders to distinguish them. In attempts to ease the identification of these non-students and better facilitate ridicule at their expense, the admissions department plans to issue neon green shirts for the high schoolers to wear. The shirts will be mandatory.

"I think this is a great move by the administration," says sophomore Kyle Osling, a student who goes to this school. "The other day I saw one and was only 98% sure it was a pre-frosh, so the new shirts will allow me to heckle with renewed confidence."

While the new shirts are still being workshopped, ideas for printing on the bright garments include: "LOOK HOW OUT OF PLACE I AM", "Ask me about my thousand-yard stare", and simply covering the shirts in pictures of sad, lost puppies.

Dean of Undergraduate Admissions Jean Milowski was particularly adamant about the necessity of the conspicuous duds and pointed out that it can be difficult to tell the difference between a pre-frosh slowly stumbling around campus while getting lectured by their parents and just a regular, burnt-out pre-med.

"There are a lot of lamoids at this school and it's important that they're verbally abused contingent upon their actual dweebiness and not the dweebiness of one of their equally lame cohorts," she said. She also mentioned the possibility of incorporating "those little flashy things troupes of Halloween children wear."

Beta testing of interaction between WashU students and the now easier-to-recognize visitors revealed a sharp gender difference in the youngsters' reception. While prospective male students enjoyed such pejorative epithets as "fart-muncher" and "fart-gobbler", female pre-frosh not only received directions around campus from current male students, but also directions to said males' dorms for "private tours." Lauding the hospitality and thoughtfulness of the male students, the Office of Undergraduate Admissions deemed the testing successful.

As of press time, the university is looking into creating different-colored shirts for prospective freshmen with boyfriends back home.

WUnderground Presents: Unhelpful Advice!

Advice columns these days are always so useful and applicable to the readers' everyday lives. Not this one! WUnderground breaks the mold again!

5 Foods That SUCK When You're High!

- Cabbage soup—tastes shitty sober and doesn't improve much when high.
- Raw okra—you can eat any food while high, why on earth would you choose raw okra?
- Spoiled milk—only good if it's not spoiled, which by definition it always is.
- Reese's wrappers—not only does it not taste good, but it's so close to something that tastes amazing. Just eat the Reese's instead.
- Rat poison—isn't a food, tastes awful, and will kill you.

5 Great Activities to do on the Moon

- Check out Neil Armstrong's footsteps—they're still there!
- Have sex—less gravity makes it awesome...probably!
- There's this sick crater near the dark side. It's fucking sweet, check it out.
- Trampolining.
- Pogorubbermoonball—an awesome sport invented on the moon that can only be played on the moon.

5 Reasons Not to Stab a Guinea Pig in Front of a Toddler

- It will hurt the guinea pig.
- It will upset the toddler.
- It will make your dagger all dirty and you'll have to clean it later.
- You will have to replace the guinea pig, presuming whoever you got it from cares that it's dead.
- You could easily stab it when the toddler's not looking, so why involve the toddler at all?

Student Revealed to be Robot After Down-pour Causes Oil Leak, Software Damage

Campus authorities discovered a robot disguised as a student last Wednesday after a sudden afternoon rain shower caused some major operational malfunctioning in her Central Processing Unit. Instead of walking to class per usual, freshman Cyborgatron-3000 thrashed around on Mudd Field, spewing oil and meaningless JavaScript gibberish all over passersby. This distinctly inhuman behavior cast doubt on her status as a human being, and she was revealed to be a robot minutes later when she failed to express amusement at a picture of a cat playing the cello.

"She was definitely a robot," said Dr. Harris Watson, an expert in human internal medicine at the Washington University School of Medicine. "I'm pretty sure humans all have hearts and she didn't have one."

While many admit that in hindsight some of Cyborgatron's behaviors came across as somewhat robotic, they maintain that the same could be said of many WashU students. With a student base amongst the most motivated and intelligent in the country, it's not uncommon for many WashU students to seem a little—too perfect.

According to professors, friends, and roommates, Cyborg A. Tron-3000 was one of those students. Although she enrolled in a full 21 credits, was pledging a top sorority, was elected as a Student Union senator, and freelanced for StudLife, she handled her 20-hour per week job and varsity spot on the golf team without any sign of emotional distress.

"It's funny because my suite-mates and I always joke about some of the weird shit she does," said Cyborgatron's roommate Mary Robertson. "Like how she never gets tired and how she drinks oil and never showers. And any time she complained about feeling a little rusty, she would just call in a mechanic to clean her up or tweak a wire but...well, I guess we're just dipshits for not realizing she was a robot."

Admissions officials, meanwhile, have taken the defensive with regards to Cyborgatron's admission to the university, saying they stand by their decision.

"She may be a non-human robot, yes, but she's damn well programmed. Nothing is written in our bylaws requiring students to be explicitly human, so I don't understand what all the hullabaloo is," said Ron Marcus, one of the admissions officers in charge of Cyborgatron's application.

As of press time, a team of engineers, whose own humanity is debatable, is currently working on the robo-student in the computer engineering laboratories. They say her prognosis looks good, although her insatiable desire to kill humans appears incurable.

WUnderground

WUnderground is WashU's premier [only] satirical newspaper and should be taken about as seriously as Rick Santorum's opinions. The news reported by this paper is completely fictitious, at least to our knowledge. Any resemblance to persons living, ailing or dead is entirely intentional.

Chiefs of Staff

Zack Pinsky
Editor in Chief

Emily Zalla
Chief of Adobe InDesign

David Drucker
Web Deity

Staff

Nate Blecher
Co-Manager of Journalistic Integrity

Brian Cizek
Boss of Buffoonery

David Drucker
Vice President of Humor Operations

Whitney Mann
Head Joke Consultant

Corie Miller
Chief Funniness Advisor

Clare Mulligan
Premier of Shittiness-Preventing

Xiaoyin Qiao
Duchess of Newspaper-Publishing

Aaron Senser
Senior Undersecretary of Satire and Satirical Content

Rosie Shanley
Chairman of Comedy Writing and Wit Creation

Foreign Correspondents

Jeff Leibovich

Alix Marson

Carol Stoll

We are always recruiting new chiefs. If you would like to write, edit, doodle, spellcheck or flaunt it, girl, email us at: wunderground@su.wustl.edu, and join our facebook group!

student union
your student government

ISSN # 1938-0089

wunderground.wustl.edu

This Week in Music

Deadmau5 Scandal Uncovered; Been Using iPod for Years

Professional DJ and scumbag Joel Thomas Zimmerman, or Deadmau5 (pronounced dead mow five), is currently under investigation for fraud. The “artist” released an apology last week in response to allegations that he has been simply using an iPod on stage.

In his public apology via twitter, the DJ confirmed allegations claiming that he had been using an iPod or other mp3 devices for the last two years. Sophomore Lenny Fertick lamented his displeasure: “Honestly, I feel lied to. Using an iPod just takes the human element out of Electro House. You can’t even call it live music if you cheat like that.”

Junior Emily Radzom had similar thoughts. “Anybody can push play and jump around on stage, so what makes him so special?” she said. “ If all of this is true, I want my money back. Why would I go to a show if I can just play the same track on my speakers at home?”

The scandal grew deeper when further investigation by auditory physicists revealed that Zimmerman’s music is not technically even music. The more accurate term for Zimmerman’s creations, scientifically speaking, is “jumpy noise”, a term he will be forced to use in describing his work from now on.

World Still Hasn’t Noticed Lack of Kings of Leon

Despite having not produced any new music for two years, the world still hasn’t noticed the lack of Kings of Leon from mainstream culture. The band announced last year that they would be going on hiatus for no longer than 6 months, but that date has since passed.

The Nashville band formed in DeadMau5, currently being investigated for artistic fraud.

1999 and rose to fame in the late 2000’s with their distinctive “feral-cat-being-beaten-by-a-rainstick” sound and gained popularity with their herpes-themed ballad “Sex on Fire”.

After being reminded of who the band was, WashU students across campus were surprised to hear that the band had gone on hiatus last year. Similarly, Kings of Leon drummer Nathan Followill went over to the garage for rehearsal last Tuesday at 7 and waited a full twenty minutes for his bandmates to show up, apparently having also forgotten that the band had broken up.

For more music news, please go to www.wunderground.wustl.edu for such developments as:

“Nickelback Learns 5th Chord”

“Another Hometown Friend asks Unexcited Student if They Know 3LAU”

“Song Consisting Entirely of A# Notes Huge Hit Among Asian Father Demographic”

...and more!

The Star Scoop

The Latest Celebrity News You’ll Only Read About In WUnderground!

by WUnderground Hollywood correspondent Jane McCaffery

What Justin Beiber did last Tuesday, March 27th:

3:13AM—Justin wakes up to the sound of an intruder breaking in through his window. I pull out the chloroform rag and he’s back to sleep.

2:17PM—Justin wakes up again, finally. Two bottles was probably too much to soak the rag in.

2:21PM—Justin starts the day with a peanut butter, my hair, and jelly sandwich. I am now inside of him.

2:25PM—Justin runs one delicate hand through his golden bowl cut. There may or may not have been angels singing in the background.

2:40PM—Selena enters the room.

2:40-3:24PM—I consider throwing the used tissue I borrowed from Justin’s garbage can at Selena but conclude that I would rather keep it for myself.

3:32PM—The two discuss Justin’s recent growth spurt. Apparently he just cleared 5 feet, God bless his little soul.

3:34PM—Justin drops a napkin on the floor, and gracefully bends down to retrieve it. The soft arch of his back is almost as intoxicating as his delicate facial features and pillowy lips.

3:45-4:30PM—Displaying excellent concentration skills and adorable determination, Justin watches TV for awhile—he was so engaged!

4:43PM—Justin bites into some lasagna.

4:43PM—Justin swallows lasagna.

4:48 PM—Justin changes into his signature purple outfit. His purple hat, purple shirt, purple shoes, and delicate stature reminded me of an oompa loompa. But the kind of oompa loompa that I would want to have delicious sex with, not the weird kind.

4:51 PM—I realize that through subconscious prodding, I could inform Justin of how perfect our marriage and babies would be.

4:53 PM—I subtly place photo-shopped pictures of Justin and me and a composite photograph of what our babies would look like around his room. Justin (presumably) subconsciously realizes that he wants to make those babies with me.

5:01 PM—Justin sneezes.

5:01 PM—A tiny booger hangs from his left nostril.

5:02 PM—Said booger ends up in a tissue, in the trash.

5:02 PM—Said tissue is deposited into my purse.

10:18PM—Justin poops two big logs and a small one, probably the lasagna from earlier based on texture.

11:13 PM—Justin goes to sleep and (I assume) has a wet dream about me.

POINT

Murder Should Remain Illegal

by Stephanie Buxley, freshman

The act of ending another human’s life is the most despicable crime a person can commit, and should therefore remain illegal. It should be the duty of the government to protect its citizens, and by punishing those who commit murder by locking them up, society will be able to deter potential criminals and keep those who have already killed from doing it again. The laws currently on the books outlawing murder are good and just, and I advise keeping them just the way they are, lest are society devolve into a bloody chaotic mess.

COUNTER-POINT

Who the Fuck is Picking These Point/Counterpoint Topics?

by Cheryl Oakes, junior

Really, guys? Whether or not murder should remain illegal? Is that really the most controversial issue we could think of? Not abortion, or affirmative action, or American foreign policy concerns? How am I supposed to argue that murder should be legalized? This issue is a complete no-brainer. I suppose one might be able to make a utilitarian argument that in the hypothetical case where the collective benefit of a person’s death outweighed the individual suffering...no, I’m sorry this is just stupid. Idiots.

Easter: A Jew's Guide

by Judah Schwartzenbaum

Easter's coming up, and believe it or not a lot of my Jewish friends at WashU don't even know what this holiday is! With so many Christians on this campus, in this country, and around the world, it's important that people of all faiths have a basic understanding of this holiday, so I figured I'd fill them in. I took a comparative religion class in high school and have an Episcopalian uncle by marriage, so I think I'm pretty qualified to handle the subject!

Easter, in a nutshell, is the celebration of Jesus's death. Or is it birth? One of the two. If you were to find Jesus's tombstone, and you looked at the dates he was born and died, one of those two would say Easter. Anyway, people coped with his death and/or celebrated his birth with chocolate, which is why we eat chocolate on Easter to celebrate/mourn. The pope celebrates Easter by eating twelve Cadbury eggs, but only the very devout eat this much.

Some of you may be wondering how the Easter bunny factors into the holiday. This might have been Jesus's pet? Hmmm I probably should have done more research for this article but for the sake of convenience let's just go with that. They had bunnies back then, right? Yea he totally could've had a bunny. The egg-hiding tradition dates back to Jesus's time, when bunnies laid eggs. Evolution has changed their reproductive system since then, but the tradition continues regardless. Creationists believe that bunnies still lay eggs, only they're invisible now. This debate is what led to the church splitting up between the Catholics and the Protestants way back when. I forget which side believes which.

Good Friday historically was the full name for Friday, since people thought that it was good that the weekend was coming up. The "good" was later dropped because it was redundant—no shit Fridays are good. Working sucks. It was added onto the Friday before Easter because people felt that it was good that Easter was coming up because it meant they could eat chocolate, which tastes really good. Palm Sunday is the week before Easter where people palm their foreheads for forgetting that Easter wasn't till next Sunday. Before calendars were invented, people made this mistake a lot.

I know a lot more about Easter, but that should be enough to get you through any conversation smoothly. Before you know it, people might start asking you if you're going to seminary after you graduate!

Top 10...

Rejected WUunderground Issue Theme Ideas

10. Punctuation-only issue
9. Swahili issue
8. The every-joke-is-racist issue
7. All-inside-joke issue
6. All nouns issue
5. Invisible ink issue
4. The Student Life issue
3. The dwarf porn issue
2. The clever, poignant, poop-joke-free issue
1. The issue where we don't coat the paper in poison

Residential College Olympics (RCO) is one of the South 40's most popular annual events.

With Park/Mudd taking home the trophy this past Saturday, WUunderground Sports looks back at the most memorable moments in RCO history.

1853—In the university's inaugural year, Eliot easily wins the RCO title, being the only Res College in existence at the time.

1866—After having both legs amputated from injuries sustained fighting in the Civil War, sophomore Brian Holloway dominates the limbo competition.

1891—Women are allowed to compete in RCO for the first time, leading to a massive spike in the popularity of the swimsuit competition.

1902—Russian Roulette is introduced as an RCO event but is quickly discarded on the basis that it's all luck.

1905—Brookings conjoined twin residents Arnold and Kyle Sopalsky double the record for most 5k participants per set of legs.

1923—1-Square renamed 4-Square, quadrupling both the number of squares involved in the game and amount of sense made by the game.

1938—The once-popular sport of jousting is discontinued after no one dies during competition for four years straight, rendering it boring.

1969—Man walks on moon. Students who had previously participated in RCO watch this happen on TV.

1978—Rainy day cancels all events except for chess and competitive masturbation, both of which are dominated by Spencer Welsh of JKL.

1991—Penultimate frisbee renamed to make it sound more intense.

1998—In a display of poor planning by CS40, RCO, Holi, and WUstock scheduled for same day with hilarious results.

2002—HIGE edges Lee/Beau 2-1 in the highest-scoring soccer match in RCO history.

2009—With Umraht in the process of being reconstructed, the Ruby/Umraht res college consisting of only one building becomes the biggest Cinderella story in RCO history when it loses to HIGE in basketball by a mere 34 points.

2011—Wayman Crow student Seth Morris suspected of doping after beating the entire Park/Mudd res college in tug-of-war.

What Do You Think?

The Allies Have Won World War II. WDYT?

Carley Peterson
Sophomore; pretentious know-it-all

"Uh, didn't that happen like ten years ago?"

Russell Zimmerman
Junior; history major

"Wait, really? Fuck, I must've bombed that midterm...."

Kayla Roberts
Freshman

"Oh, good, I was rooting for them."

Adolf Hitler
German dictator, a real d-bag

"Poop!"

George Washington
former presidential candidate

"I heard Fitz and the Tantrums are coming to WILD? Who the fuck are they? I mean I'm probably gonna be too shitfaced to care but still, some name recognition would be nice."