

Many Bothans died to bring us this information.

WUUnderground

VOLUME 9, ISSUE 1

AUGUST 24TH, 2012

PRICE: 4 SPOONFULS OF VIRGIN BLOOD

Facebook Unveils “You’re Being Creepy as Fuck” Notification System

In response to a series of complaints from parents, college students, and reformed pedophiles, Facebook announced last Thursday that it would be rolling out a new “You’re Being Creepy as Fuck” notification system. The new feature will display a warning message to alert users when the photos they are stalking depict people under the age of eighteen.

“Everybody knows what it’s like to be stalking a cute girl on Facebook, scrolling further and further back into her photo history, and then having to abruptly remove your hand from your pants when you realize the chick in that bikini pic is fourteen,” explained Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg. “Our new feature will help prevent this occurrence by explicitly telling you when you’re being creepy as fuck.”

Sophomore Nate Campbell

is one of the many Facebook users excited for the new release. “I was going through Tiffany Stamkin’s photos after we met at a party. I had my hand lotion and trusty jizz rag ready—then all of a sudden I’m looking at a picture of her in braces! Facebook users should have the peace of mind to know that the chick they’re secretly masturbating to is old enough to provide legal consent.”

Users may also be glad to know that the feature is entirely optional. “Obviously this feature can be turned off, because sometimes it’s more fun not knowing,” Zuckerberg said with a wink. “We got your back.”

Facebook also announced that it has teamed up with youporn.com to deliver a targeted marketing campaign based on users’ unique preferences in females.

A screenshot of the new “You’re Being Creepy as Fuck” Feature

Area Bigot Struggles to Decide Between Mormon and Black Man in 2012 Election

Faced by what he is calling “The most unfortunate display of options since the NBA finals,” area bigot Jefferson Hezekiah admits that he is struggling to choose between presidential hopefuls Mitt Romney and Barack Obama.

“The decision was so much easier during the last election,” Hezekiah explained. “Sure, it was pretty difficult to watch a woman run for vice president. But when you compared Obama to McCain, it was very black and white.”

Hezekiah says the decision is far more complicated now that Obama is running against a Mormon. “Now I have to ask myself, ‘Do I want the youth of America to start growing up with five moms and one dad, or one mom and no dads?’” he explained as tobacco drizzled down his chin. “What happened to the America where children were raised by their own mother and father, 1 male and 1 female, and where every kid had close to a fifty percent chance of not watching his or her parents divorce?” Hezekiah continued. “Well, my Aunt raised me after my mom ran away with a bible salesman and my dad had an affair with his sister, but at least we knew how to worship the lord Jesus Christ without relying on any weird cultish crap or gospel nonsense.”

At the very least, Hezekiah admits he is happy with Romney’s selection of running mate Paul Ryan. “For a minute I thought he was going to pick that Marco Rubio feller,” Hezekiah explained. “This country don’t need no Mexicans in the White House.”

Jefferson Hezekiah smiling for his picture.

Buried WUUnderground

Hipster Drinks “Local Brew Budweiser”

page 5

Big Shot Jewish Lawyer Buys Round of Water for Bar

page 8b

Student on Campus Still Yet to Be Asked, “Did you know they rebuilt the underpass?”

page 10w

WU Researchers Invent Flying Pigs, Millions Have Anal

page 3/4

Following the decision to include QQIA with LGBT, Acronym amended again to be more inclusive with TFTPBAIKCMDCCYTM: “Too Fat to Tell, Pedophile, Bored, Anything Involving Kevin Costner, My Dick’s Currently in a Cantaloupe so You Tell Me”

page 1.5

Girl Forgets Camera, Summer Doesn’t Happen

pages 12-20

Publisher of "50 Shades of Grey" to Target Male Demographic with "50 Shades of Sasha Grey"

The publisher of the best-selling "Fifty Shades of Grey" series has announced plans to release a new book titled "Fifty Shades of Sasha Grey." The move comes as an attempt to better target the male demographic, a spokesperson from Vintage Books confirmed, for the 2011 novel made quite a splash as it hit the market.

The announcement has been met with its fair share of skepticism. "Everybody knows that "Fifty Shades of Grey" was only a success because women don't have the computer skills needed to access online porn and effectively clear all evidence from their browser history," explained Women and Gender Studies Professor Leanne Helms. "But men, on the other hand, lack the basic intelligence required to read. So I don't see how this book can do well."

Despite such criticism, initial focus groups suggest that the new book may indeed prove to be a success. 9 out of 10 men surveyed said that they understood and enjoyed the book, although some admitted that a few pages into the steamy novel "Things started to get hard." Additionally, the only man who didn't enjoy the book admitted that he was too busy masturbating to the cover photo to ever actually open it. In fact, the only major complaints were related to plot structure, with one survey participant commenting that "the climax came too soon."

The Hard-Backed Cover of "Fifty Shades of Sasha Grey"

Much of the book's success will ultimately depend on whether enough men will be willing to read erotic fiction. "To help ease men into the concept, we've included lots of pictures," explained Vintage Books spokes-man John Brown. "In fact, it's mostly pictures with a couple of captions here and there." The books will also be packaged with two small helpful pamphlets, "Reading with One Hand" and "Paper-cuts: How and Where to Avoid Them."

Scientists Discover Life on Fontbonne Campus

Sapphire, the Fontbonne Rover, continues her search for life.

A team of researchers from Washington University in St. Louis's Earth and Planetary Sciences Department rocked the scientific community Monday when they announced the discovery of carbon-based life forms on the Fontbonne University campus.

The discovery came late Thursday evening when Sapphire, the $2.4 billion robot sent to explore the desolate Fontbonne terrain, detected abnormally high levels of oxygen, water, and THC at the south end of the campus. Several hours of exploring eventually revealed the presence of 3 students, who had evidently been living curled up between a pile of rocks more than 5 feet below the earth's surface.

"For years, Wash U students have gazed down Big Bend with wonder and asked 'are we alone?'" said Head Researcher John Davis. "For the first time in history, we finally have the answer."

The discovery has promoted an active level of dialogue among student groups, from campus Christians asking "Should we teach them to love God?" and fraternities asking "Should we rush them and teach them to love beer?"

University researchers hope that the findings will pave the way for future endeavors. "Now that we know there's life on the Fontbonne campus, the possibilities are limitless" explained Davis. "Who knows? One day we might even discover intelligent life."

WUnderground

WUnderground is WashU's premier [only] satirical newspaper and should be taken about as seriously as Kristen Stewart's apology.

The news reported by this paper is completely fictitious, at least to our knowledge. Any resemblance to persons living, ailing or dead is entirely intentional.

Chiefs of Staff

David Drucker
President

Jeff Liebovich
Editor in Chief

Staff

Nate Blecher

Brian Cizek

Whitney Mann

Alix Marson

Corie Miller

Clare Mulligan

Aaron Senser

Rosie Shanley

Carol Stoll

Emily Zalla

We are always recruiting new members. If you would like to write, edit, doodle, spellczech or flaunt it, girl, email us at:

wunderground@su.wustl.edu,
and join our facebook group!

student union
your student government

9 771938 008000

ISSN # 1938-0089

wunderground.wustl.edu

LIKE WHAT YOU SEE?

WANT MORE UP-TO-THE-MINUTE NEWS?

HAVE A NEWSWORTHY STORY?

NEED SOMEONE TO BE YOUR ALIBI?

CONTACT WUNDERGROUND!

Find new stories at wunderground.wustl.edu

Share your finds at facebook.com/wunderground.wustl

Get in touch at wunderground@su.wustl.edu

University Senior is the New Ugliest Thing on Campus Named "Eliot"

Washington University senior Eliot Traftson is now the ugliest thing named Eliot on campus, according to a new study funded by the Student Union.

"Everybody loves to complain about how ugly Eliot is," explained SU senator Jonathan Stevens. "So when we found out that Eliot Hall was going to be torn down, we decided to take it upon ourselves to protect this timeless tradition of complaining by finding the next ugliest Eliot on campus."

While most of the student body is relieved that there is a new thing called Eliot to hate on, the results of the study have proved disastrous for Eliot's social life. "My girlfriend left me, my friends won't go out with me, and yesterday an entire tour group stopped to point at me and laugh," admitted a teary-eyed Eliot. "This one guy even took a picture."

Rachel Smith, Eliot's ex-girlfriend, recalled the day that he became the university's ugliest Eliot. "We were eating lunch and I was trying to convince him to fly home with me and meet my parents," she said. "Then I heard a loud crashing sound and watched as Eliot Hall came tumbling down in the distance. I looked back across the table at Eliot and suddenly thought to myself, 'Wow, this kid really has a giant nose. With a wart on it. And a unibrow.' I don't know how I never noticed that stuff before."

Others students have expressed similar feelings of disgust. "It's really a shame," said fellow senior Ryan Daley. "Our campus is just so beautiful, but every now and then you'll see Eliot sticking out like a sore thumb off in the distance and it ruins everything. I mean, why would Wash U ever admit somebody that ugly? He doesn't fit in with the rest of campus at all."

In a related story, SU representatives have announced that they will respond to construction on the underpass by beginning a new search for the best Wash U student to draw ads on.

POINT

My Internship Last Summer Was a Major Step in My Professional Development

by Grant Kaufman, Senior, tool

My corporate internship last summer was definitely a major step in my professional development. From day one I was involved in multiple high value projects—it's clear that everyone at the company really valued my opinion. Sure, every now and then I had to make the occasional cup of coffee for one of my thirty-seven superiors, but I spent most of the time tackling complex, important problems, and quality of my work definitely made me stand out from the other interns.

I managed to do a lot of networking and established a great relationship with my boss, so I'm sure he'll put in a fantastic word on my behalf when I apply for a full time position next year. Sure, all the time I spent networking and sitting in a cubicle took a toll on my social life, but it's ok because after I receive a long term offer and start working 90 hours per week I won't have time for petty indulgences like friends anyway.

COUNTER-POINT

Well, that Intern was Useless

by Stan Miller, Boss

Which intern are we talking about again? Grant? Was that the anal-retentive Asian kid or the brown-nosing Jew? Oh, Kaufman. That name does ring a bell. He was nothing special—I wouldn't go out of my way to recommend him for a full time position or anything like that. For Christ's sake he couldn't even make a decent cup of coffee! Two sugars and a splash of skim milk... how hard can it be? To be honest, sometimes I wonder why we even hire interns. The little shits don't do anything. Grant never had much work, so he spent most of his time sitting around admiring his ties and browsing reddit. Then you'd give him some menial task like making copies, and when you thanked him for it he'd get this pompous grin and look so excited that I bet he busted a nut right on the spot. That kid would definitely be a lot better off if he took the five zillion business cards he collected last summer out of his ass and started getting in touch with reality.

Class of 2016 Brings Record Number of Stanford Rejects

Incoming freshman Michael Rosenblatt may not be attending Stanford University this fall, but that does not mean his grandparents aren't still "very proud of him." Rosenblatt is not alone, as a record 55% of this year's incoming freshmen class was rejected by the California university.

While rejection is always a bitter pill to swallow, the grandparents of this year's Stanford rejects still have reason to smile. Morton and Ethel Rosenblatt of Long Island admit that while they hadn't heard of Washington University until several months ago, they have since learned more about the school and now think very highly of it.

"At first, we were a little surprised," Morton confessed. "Michael has always been a perfect student and we couldn't understand why somebody as smart and handsome as him would be going to school in Missouri." Yet the Rosenblatts were soon surprised to learn that Joshua Goldstein, the gifted grandson of their friends Ari and Sarah, was in fact a recent Wash U graduate himself.

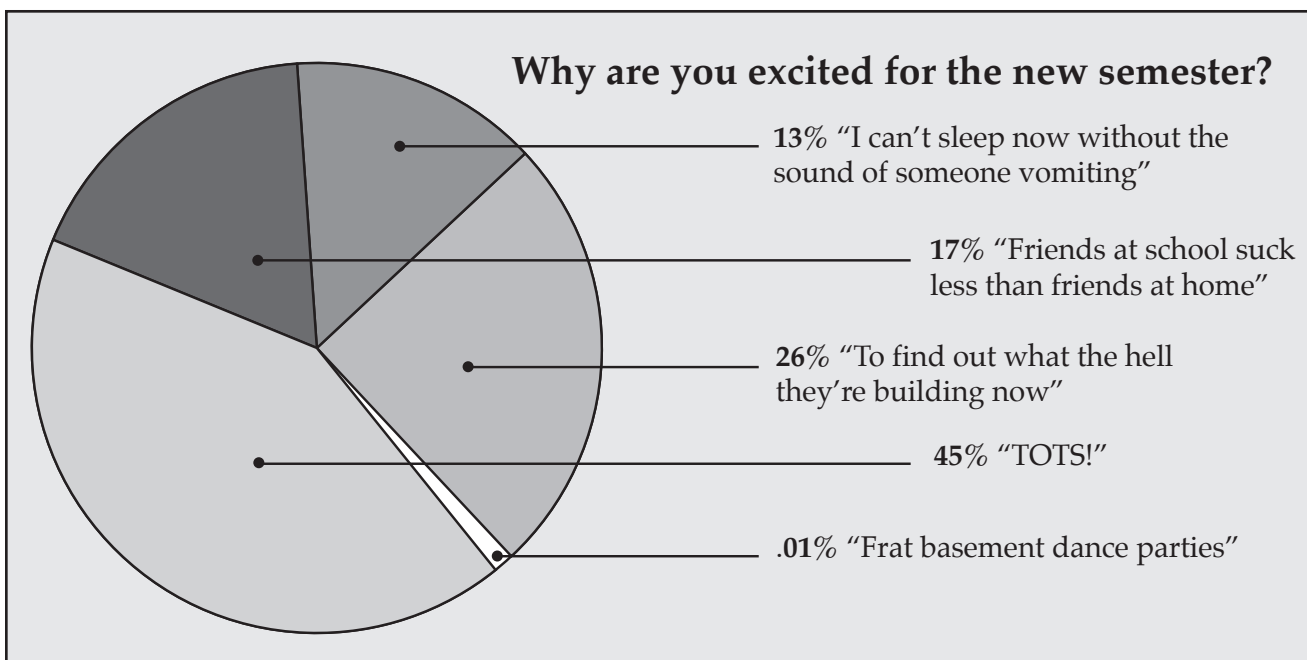

"The Goldsteins told us that Wash U is sometimes called 'The Stanford of the Midwest!'" explained Ethel, who beamed with a re-found sense of pride. "Now I'll have something to tell all the gals at the weekly mahjong!"

The Rosenblatts cite the university's "strong pre-medical programs" and the "numerous organizations designed to help students connect with their Jewish identity" as some of the little-known university's other redeeming qualities.

"It's okay," they began to justify, "I'm sure he was only rejected because they had too many applicants. He'll just go there after undergrad if the bubbulah wants. I'm sure he didn't want to go all the way to California anyways. Now he can come home for Passover!"

When asked whether he was glad about his grandparents' newfound respect for Wash U, Michael rolled his eyes and mumbled something about overbearing Jews before excusing himself, saying the he "really needed to smoke a fat blunt right now."

Top 10...

Mistakes Freshmen Make

10. Farting in the library
9. Being caught masturbating by your roommate
8. Asking how strong the punch is at a party
7. Believing the guy who tells you it isn't that strong
6. Asking why the frat house soda is sticky
5. Taking ALL the free condoms from your hallway cause you're "totally gonna need them some day"
4. Professing your intense love for the first person you hook up with
3. Not checking your elbows during a game of Bierut
2. Relying on Stud Life for news
1. Going to class and being excited to learn

What Do You Think?

The new Wash U football season is right around the corner. What are your thoughts on the upcoming season?

Colton "Buck" Crawford
Quarterback, struggler with reality

"I'm benching 20 pounds more since last season and am so ready for the NFL draft combine. This is our year! Go Bears go Bears go Bears yeah baby!"

George Washington
Passive aggressive asshole

"Well, I did win a war and pretty much single-handedly save and unite our country, but it's totally cool if the school that's named after me can't even manage to be good at this one simple game."

Andrew Shultz
Average junior

"My thoughts on the upcoming season of Football? Is that a TV show?"

Dr. Stuart Hofstadter
Professor

"I find that attendance is usually better when my classes are scheduled during the football games."

Hank Van der Guijt
Dutch exchange student, fervent nationalist

"Yes, football season is coming! Real Madrid and Barcelona are the favorites but Ajax Amsterdam will win the Champions League and bring pride to the glorious Netherlands!"