Third Presidential Debate Followed by Beer Pong Tournament

In an effort to connect with younger voters, presidential hopefuls Barack Obama and Mitt Romney faced off in a televised beer pong tournament following the third debate.

"What do young people want?" asked political analyst Elena Novovich. "Young people want to see the cast of Glee topless. But when that's not possible, they want a candidate who can keep his cool in tough situations, perform under pressure, and sink last cup," she explained.

The tournament, hosted by the Beta Phi fraternity at George Washington University, consisted of a best of seven match between the two tickets. The Republican team found itself at an immediate disadvantage when Governor Romney, sticking to his devout Mormon beliefs, refused to drink any alcohol. Nevertheless, the Republicans managed to take an early lead after Vice Presidential candidate Paul Ryan, who agreed to drink all of Romney's beer, went on an outstanding nine-cup streak.

The Democrats roared back in the second game to even the series. Tempers flared early in the third game, when Mitt Romney became belligerently drunk after flip-flopping and drinking an entire beer. The former governor became enraged after President Obama reneged on his initial promise to drop his pants after hitting the bitch cup. Play resumed after the moderator calmed

"Fuck yeah! Drink it bitch!" shouts Biden

Romney down and forced Biden to quit waving his genitalia.

"Obama's trash talk really got to Romney," said a wrinkly man on CNN. "After that, the game was in the bag."

The Democrats stormed to a second victory in game 3, a win Vice President Biden attributed to his "iron liver." Although Ryan accused Biden of leaning over the table, the Vice President simply threw his head back and laughed, calling the allegations "malarky."

Added Biden, "quit being a fag and make a cup." He later apologized for not being sorry.

Before the fourth game, Gary Johnson and Jill Stein asked if they could get on the table next. Both parties tried to ignore them, but after Johnson started to bang on the table, Obama apologized, saying that Hillary Clinton had called the next game. "And I'm next on this side," Ryan added.

A plan to check IDs at the door re-energized the Republicans, who rolled off two quick victories, putting them up three games to two.

Facing elimination, Obama's past collegiate experience and penchant for basketball came through, and the Democratic ticket levelled the series at three wins apiece. Moderators opted to postpone the final game after Romney passed out and Biden disappeared with a couple of sophomore girls, leaving only his pants behind.

President Obama held a press conference after the match was suspended. "Party's not over yet," Obama told the reporters. "There's a reason they call me the Commander-in-Kief."

Dick-on-Forehead Drawing Receives International Critical Acclaim

Art critics from around the world are flocking to St. Louis to catch a glimpse of a revolutionary new exhibit at the Kemper Art Museum. The display, titled Dick-on-Forehead, features a sharpie drawing, spilled beer, and a smudge of an unknown brown substance that "definitely isn't peanut butter" on the forehead of a passed out fraternity brother. Bobby Murphy, the artist behind the masterpiece, admits he is shocked by how quickly his penis has penetrated the art community.

"My bro Jake passed out on our couch with his shoes on, so I mean like, yeah I obviously had no choice but to draw balls on his face," Murphy explained. "And then a couple days later I got a call from some guy saying that my dick was beautiful and he'd pay me to share it with the world. It was pretty cool, even after I realized that he wasn't a Hustler employee responding to my job application."

Patrons of the Kemper Art Museum admiring Murphy's artwork

"The attention to detail and the beautiful symbolism of the piece truly makes it a masterpiece," explained feminist art historian Emilia Jones-Murray. "For instance, the way the dick is pointing downward, with semen seeming to shoot into the young man's mouth, is clearly a genius commentary on society's expectation that men should buy women drinks at a bar."

The penis is also receiving praise for its exceptional detail and realism. "The length to girth ratio is simply breathtaking," explained international penis-art expert Gerald Weinbaum. "I've seen some true masterpieces over the years: The Great Michigan State Monster, Cyrille the Cyclops, and Upright Gentleman Exposed Beneath the Harvest Moon. But this one definitely gives them some stiff competition. Furthermore, the piece speaks volumes as to the social stigma of having a small penis," he continued. "At nearly five inches, the exaggerated length of the drawing is enough to make any man, not just those of us whose wives have run away with Steve the attorney next door, feel inadequate."

In an effort to further his promising future as an artist, Murphy plans to take a sepia-toned photograph of a flaming bag of shit on the Chancellor's doorstep. His works will be featured at the Kemper Art Museum until November 22nd.

Students Relieved That They Don't Have to Pretend to Like Baseball for Second Year in a Row

Following the San Francisco Giants defeat of the Cardinals in the National League Championship Series, students across campus have breathed a collective sigh of relief knowing that they will not have to pretend to like baseball or the Cardinals for a second straight World Series.

For many students, the Cardinals elimination means that they no longer have to waste their time memorizing "meaningless player names and statistics."

In an effort to fit in with his male friends, sophomore Ricky Grayson has spent the last month using flashcards to memorize baseball rules and the Cardinals' batting order. "I didn't want to be unprepared like I was last October when they were in the World Series," he explained. "Thank god they lost," he added, mumbling something about the impossibility of memorizing two different guys named "Carpenter."

Senior Karin Phillips was also relieved to hear that the Cardinals failed to progress. "Pretending to be interested over the course of six games while my boyfriend explained the stupid the rules of baseball was the hardest thing I've ever done. If I had to sit through that bullshit one more time I swear to god I'd have set Bears Den on fire again and trust me, I wouldn't make any more mistakes this time."

Most of the players have also expressed disappointment in seeing their season end. However, Cardinals' second baseman and California native Daniel Descalso admitted that he's looking forward to "getting the fuck out of Saint Louis" and heading back to his house in San Francisco. "I've got pretty dope seats for game 1 of the World Series," he added with a grin.

Indeed, the future is bright for many students who will no longer have to worry about seeming uncool around more knowledgeable people they are trying to impress, including job interviewers, other students, and local black people.

Student Seeks to Dispel Rumours of Homosexuality Through Rigorous Sexual Experimentation

Women and Gender Studies major Peter Wyman is currently in the middle of a groundbreaking study in which he is applying the scientific method to his own sexual experimentation. According to department sources, the senior has laid out a rigorous proposal to debunk the prevailing belief that he is a homosexual.

"I've always been interested in sexual experimentation, so I thought to myself, 'Hey, maybe I can turn this into a research project and receive some funding,'" Wyman explained. "Flash forward 5 months and they're giving me $10,000, which is more than enough to cover my medical bills."

According to his advisor, Professor Quincy Jennings, the funding has also helped Wyman achieve the requisite level of thoroughness. "Any sample size less than 1,500 is statistically insufficient to describe the US population," Jennings explained. "That's why, to provide incontrovertible evidence of his heterosexuality, Peter has committed to blowing over 2,300 dudes."

In addition to using a large sample size, Wyman has also sought to control for a wide range of additional variables, including race, penis size, number of men involved, and what types condiments are used during the sexual encounter.

"In order to overturn the theory that I'm gay, I need to do far more than simply show that I remain unaroused by the sight of a penis. For example, I also need sufficient evidence to prove that the experience of licking syrup off of an Asian man's penis while being pummelled from behind by a giant black dong is entirely unpleasurable as well," he explained. "And I think maybe 10 more trials should be sufficient."

Wyman also explained that scientific studies must make their methodology transparent and subject to peer review. Consequently, he says that he is planning to stream all of his experiments online. "Another core tenant of experimental science is that all results must be replicable. So for the sake of accuracy, I'm going to start all over again next semester."

Party a Flop Despite Stellar Facebook Event Description

Sophomore Megan Rowerson reportedly agonized over her facebook event description for hours, rewriting it from scratch several times before inviting 1,283 of her closest friends to her fall break party. Despite Rowerson's inclusion of punny similes, frequent use of the term 'jkjk', a humorous urban music reference, and the selection of a clever meme for the event photo, attendance was still disappointing. Of the five guests, four were her roommates.

Rowerson said she was "baffled and insulted" by the poor turnout, particularly since she saw all those mobile uploads from the party at "that dumb slut Sarah Wiskind's place."

"I literally don't understand," Rowerson said. "Sarah Wiskind's facebook event description was total crap. I mean, I wrote out all these playful sarcastic insults like 'blah blah if you do this, then fuck you.' Plus I also made extensive use of parentheses. When was the last time you went to an event that didn't have parentheses in the description? People went to Sarah's party and she didn't even use caps lock in her event description!"

Official tallies revealed that over 60 people people attended Sarah Wiskind's party, and publicly available photos from the party indicate that the party-goers enjoyed themselves. "Whatever, I bet people were just pretending to look happy in those pictures because they were trying to be nice," Rowerson said. "Plus, Sarah Wiskind probably ran out of drinks really fast. How lame is that?"

Sources close to Rowerson say she is doing her best to use the failure as a learning opportunity. For her next party, she hopes to boost attendance by including a link to a funny youtube video in her description as well.

WHO WHO'RE IT BEST

HALLOWEEN EDITION

Who was tricked into looking like trash and who treated us with the most erotic and arousing costumes this Halloween? You did your best to turn Greek Goddesses into Sex Goddesses and to render Warlocks and Pumpkins reminiscent of Cocks and Blumpkins, and now WUnderground has determined Who Whore it Best...

★ There's something about Phil Bumblehoff's detached gaze that would leave any fugitive begging him to pin them against a building and deliver their Miranda Rights. The over-the-top nature of this racy get-up clearly labels Phil a lover of props and a man who isn't afraid to make use of those handcuffs around his neck. With junk nearly pouring out of his trunk, Phil could have stood to show a little more skin with this costume, but those layers of protection offer an element of mystery and a challenge to penetration that is difficult to ignore. With this costume, Phil is equipped to head into battle, and we would have liked nothing more than to take a ride in the back of his cop car this Halloween.

★ Standing at four feet eleven inches, Ashley Appleton manages to turn a tutu and frills into a risqué suit of seduction. While our parole officer told us that we'd be in violation of our parole if we printed Ashley's picture without covering her face, the implicit challenge posed by her forbidden innocence fused with the explicit challenge posed by the legal system leaves any passer-by dying to burrow in her rabbit hole. Not only are her pig tails just asking to be pulled, but the tooth gaps where her baby-teeth used to be could offer an interesting change of pace in the bedroom. Her eyebrows may be unplucked and her legs unshaved, but Ashley still effortlessly hops into the winner's spot as Biggest Forest Floozy with this costume.

★ Red-hot, mouthwatering, and lewd, Hot Dog's costume this year is fit to be devoured. This guise takes the traditional "ketchup bottle" suit to the next erotic and innovative level as Hot Dog smeared the ketchup all over his smooth, juicy, cooked-to-perfection figure. Like a microwavable meal, Hot Dog looks like he only needs to be heated up a little before he's ready to be enjoyed. He might be lacking curves, but Hot Dog looks easy to grip and handle in this form-fitting Ketchup attire. Even without relish, mustard, or onions, everyone was drooling to take a bite out of this ketchup-soaked wiener.

POINT

COUNTER-POINT

Lance Armstrong is still a hero.

by John Collins, optimist

Regardless of what we read in the media, Lance Armstrong is still a hero. Sure, maybe recent allegations have tainted his image, but they're still only allegations—nothing more. Besides, the man beat cancer, and his unrelenting efforts have helped save countless lives. Let's take a step back, look at the big picture, and stop persecuting a man who has used his success to help people suffering around the world. His contributions to cancer research and awareness are remarkable and his legacy as a philanthropist will outlive his status as an athlete. He overcame adversity and proved that, even with one testicle, anything is possible.

I want nothing to do with this asshole.

by Lance Armstrong's One Remaining Testicle

Fuck this guy. Seriously, I should have abandoned ship with the other nut a long time ago. Do you know what it's like dangling from beneath this piece of shit? For years I've had to just bounce around all by myself and take it while his drug-laden sweat drips all around me. Countless eyewitness reports, many of them from teammates who agreed to implicate themselves and finally do what's right, and he's still denying it? That kind of egotistical defiance takes balls, and as his ball, I want to set the record straight and make it perfectly clear that I had absolutely nothing to do with any of this. Please, I'm begging you, somebody take a pair of hedge trimmers to this psychopath's scrotum and set me free.

Michelle Obama Can't Wait to Pick Her Nose

First Lady Michelle Obama can't wait until the press pool photographers clear the room so that she can pick her nose. According to sources close to the First Lady, Michelle has been struggling to maintain her composure next to the President since first becoming aware of a giant nugget in her right nostril about fifteen minutes ago.

According to one highly-ranked campaign official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, Obama is trying to avoid a spectacle "like when Barbara Bush farted on a hot mike in '91." Many experts still think that brief moment of flatulence cost George Bush the election.

"Look, you can see her nose twitching," the source continued. "Don't be fooled by that frozen smile."

"It must be peeking out by now," President Obama reportedly whispered to a nearby aide. "Christ, I can hear it whistling."
