Obama's Drone Strike Abortion Policy Leaves Liberals, Conservatives Feeling Conflicted

Pro-life conservatives and anti-war liberals alike say they are conflicted about President Obama's recent announcement that his administration will approve the use of already controversial Predator Drone strikes as a means of providing safe abortions for women who happen to become impregnated on foreign soil.

"I support a woman's right to choice," said Obama at a televised press conference on Wednesday afternoon. "Fetuses out there are hijacking our women's bodies, and as Commander-in-Chief I have a responsibility to stop such threats to Americans by using any means at my disposal. The Predator Drone technology makes it possible to accurately target and surgically eliminate the uterine insurgents from hundreds of miles away without causing any harm to the mother."

Despite the President's confidence, politicians from both sides of the aisle have expressed misgivings over the policy, insisting that the issue is far more complicated than Obama claims. "On the one hand, fetuses are people, and I could never approve of a government that uses public funds to murder God's children," said Congressman Steven Palazzo (R-MS). "But on the other hand, I fully support any government effort that seeks to eliminate foreign threats via the use of expensive and deadly force."

Congresswoman Lynn Woolsey (D-CA) echoed a similar degree of confusion. "I certainly support a woman's right to choice," he explained. "However, I'm also appalled by the Obama administration's widespread use of drone strikes—particularly when the non-human zygotes being targeted are American citizens."

The debate over whether these fetuses are human beings without the right to life, or non-human beings bestowed with American citizenship and Constitutional protection, will likely remain a hotly contested issue for quite some time. Despite the controversy, Obama remains committed to his decision to exercise his Executive powers as he sees fit. As the debate continues, it will likely be up to the Courts to eventually decide whether Obama's targets are Americans with inalienable human rights or a growing organization of terrorist cells.

Editorial: Cherish Your Loved Ones While You Can, Because One Day You Might Wake Up and They'll Be Imaginary

by Manti Te'o

Manti Te'o is a linebacker at the University of Notre Dame. It has recently come to light that his girlfriend, Lennay Kekua, who passed away late last year, was in fact invented in an elaborate hoax. She remains alive only in Te'o's thoughts and memories. Just like before.

We often get caught up in our petty and materialistic culture, taking the important things like friends, family, and the physical existence of our loved ones for granted. I know I did. But recently, I learned that Lennay Kekua, my beloved long distance girlfriend, was made up. I sadly now have a first hand understanding of the beautiful and timeless adage: "You don't know what you've got 'til it's imaginary."

Oh, what I'd give just for the opportunity to say goodbye and tell my Lennay that I love her one last time.

I remember the first time we spoke and how I could clearly see Lennay for all of her beauty. There was this amazing connection between usit must have been at least 24 Mbps download. But as the months passed, I grew comfortable. Complacent.

As our online relationship continued, I ceased to appreciate the sound of her voice, the sight of her screenname popping up on AIM, and the joy that came from believing my loved one was a tangible object, firmly situated within the elusive and confusing empirically measurable construct that is reality.

The last time we ever spoke was during a fight. I remember the last thing I ever said to her, the cruel and hurtful words that haunt me to this day: "Why don't you just shut up, go crawl in hole and be imaginary?" I shouted at her. What I wouldn't give to take that back.

The very next day I got the call at that every boyfriend dreads. A guy from ESPN, telling you continued on page 4

Honest Sorority Sister Unsure How To Communicate Feelings About New Pledge Class

Sorority sister Lindsey White expressed uncertainty yesterday as to how she should properly articulate her feelings about her sorority's latest pledge class. The Junior who describes the new group of 47 girls as "pretty nice I guess," says she has been unable to shower the new members with the requisite levels of exaggerated love and adulation.

"I don't really have a problem with any of the ones I met, but I certainly wouldn't say I love them or anything like that. I mean, it's not like they are my actual biological sisters," White said about the group of girls she has known for less than ten days. "I could see myself being decently good friends with some of them down the road, but at this point it's impossible to tell, really."

White continues to grapple with various ways to communicate her feelings accurately without hurting anyone's feelings.

"I could say 'Congratulations' I guess, since it's kind of a big deal to join a sorority," she said. "People would be cool with that, I think. But I probably won't put 'I look forward to eventually befriending some of you.' I think that might come across as passive-aggressive, even though it's completely true."

As of press time, Karen Oswald's new pledge babies are "THE BEESSSTTT!!!!!!!"

every man in the library was chanting the phrase in unison.

As of press time, not even Wash U's most masculine satirists can resist that fucking awesome chorus.

Every Guy In The Library Simultaneously Listening To Taylor Swift's "I Knew You Were Trouble"

At approximately 10:43 pm last Thursday, all 29 males occupying the second floor of the library were secretly and independently listening to Taylor Swift's new single, "I Knew You Were Trouble." Unaware that every other male was listening to the same song, each library patron privately listened to the track on his own personal audio device.

The silence was interrupted, however, when sophomore Ryan Finster stood up accidentally unplugging his headphones from his laptop. "I wanted to just zone out and crank up the song, but then the unimaginable happened," he explained. "I was waving to a girl I knew and accidentally pulled out the headphone cord. Everybody could hear the song blasting through the laptop speakers."

Ashamed and embarrassed, Finster gathered his things and was reportedly about exit the library when Senior Alex Laughner rose to Finster's defense by defiantly unplugging his own headphones, a gesture which publically revealed that he too was listening to Swift's song.

Laughner's courage inspired yet another to stand up and admit he was listening to the song as well. Empowered by their newfound sense of community, one by one the remaining the young men stood up, each of them boldly proclaiming, "I'M listening to Taylor Swift" until

A distracted woman looks on as brave men exercise their new right to train in the front line of the yoga studio

After years of gross underrepresentation in the Estrogym, male students across the South 40 are rallying to fight for gender equality in the predominantly female workout facility. Hundreds of students across campus have signed onto a petition calling for the University to lift cultural barriers and end the era of "hergemonic dominance".

"Guys are just as capable of working out in the Estrogym as girls," said freshman Ed Lewis, glancing up from a copy of Cosmo to speak with a reporter as he slowly moved his feet in an elliptical motion on what we are told is some sort of exercise machine. "We want to fight for toned abs, even if it requires making the perilous journey past the fro-yo machine downstairs."

Fraternity Pledge Pretty Sure He Remembers Liking His New Brothers

Although some of the details are a bit hazy, freshman Kyle Wickham is pretty sure he really likes all of the guys in the house he has decided to pledge. "I don't really remember the last rush party too well, to be honest," admitted Wickham. "But given the magnitude of my headache the next morning, I'm pretty sure we had a great time and got along really well."

While Wickham would have liked to partake in the rush craze by posting an excited facebook status about the party, the illegal nature of the events that took place, combined with the six games of Beer Die that preceded them, made it impossible for him to do so. "All I can say is that it involved a goat, half of a stripper, and 3 copies of Ghost Rider," he explained. "Man, I really wish I could remember which half—I hope it was the fun half."

Wickham really hopes he can remember which fraternity he decided to join before he misses the Initiation.

Club Kill People

by Gred Gulg,
Concerned Caveman

In modern world, lots of new things. Fire give heat. Dog help hunt. Wheel move things. But in way, we no change from Homo erectus. Still have many die from club unnecessary.

How many die before we control club? Last week, man with club kill two people in public cave before he club self.

Week earlier, man accidentally club friend while they hunt antelope. Some say need club to hunt. Antelope no have club. Is it fair hunt antelope with club?

You say that if we ban club, only bad people have club. But club only cause more club. Let us stop club.

You say we stop club and world is good. But this no right. Bad people no listen to you. You like man talking to bear. If we ban club, only bad people have club. Then what stop bad man?

If family threatened by man with club, would not you use club? Club save lives. Last year, man go crazy at fertility rites and he try to club every man in sight. I pull out concealed club and club him. He only hurt one, thanks to club.

Club bad in wrong hands. But in right hands, club protect against bad man and even lion. Also, right to club in Constitution.

Editorial: Yes, I Have Taken Five Dicks at Once, But I Will Never Stoop Down to the Point of Speaking at Wash U

by Sasha Grey
Super-Serious Actress

It's true, I'm a controversial figure. I've earned a living by pushing the limits of my labia and doing things that many in society would consider disgusting, inappropriate, and even offensive. But I would never, ever stoop so low that I'd be willing to speak at Washington University.

Sasha Grey, taking her acting career super seriously

across the student body, however, many at the University remain skeptical as to whether or not such changes can be practically implemented. "Mixing genders in the Estrogym is a dangerous social experiment," explained Estrogym General Manager Betty Wilson. "I'm all for equality, but I just don't think that many men are physically capable of fitting into tight neon spandex outfits and slowly jogging in place for lengthy periods of time."

Another concern for gym administrators is that integrating the two genders will prove detrimental to the camaraderie between female exercisers and the effectiveness of their workouts. "The women here have a defined regimen. They shower together. They take yoga classes together. And they always go to the toilet in groups of two or three. This is no place for a man," Wilson asserted.

The few males who have braved the Estrogym's hostile territory have found themselves in a treacherous and unforgiving environment. Initial reports suggest that at least seven men have died since being allowed into the gym and more casualties are expected as more restrictions are lifted.

I'm a serious actress. I won best performer at the Fappies six times, and even shovved an Oscar for Best Actress up my colon once. That's one more than Cate Blanchett has ever won, by the way.

With that type of success comes an intense media spotlight and coming to Wash U to speaking at Sex Week would inextricably associate me with a morally depraved school. Given that I am retiring from pornography and I need to focus on my acting career, this is something that I just cannot swallow.

I've masturbated in front of camera. I've done guy on girl. Girl on girl. Girl on girl on guy on horse. I've been whipped, gagged, chained, nailed, railed, and willingly allowed myself to be forced to do things that I would not be willing to do, but the moral compass at this degenerate school is viscerally upsetting. The lack of financial and cultural diversity at this campus is appalling. For Christ's sake, I've had more black people inside me at one time than have ever been on your university's campus.

Wash U, you disgust me.

Yeah, I'm fine with a blindfolded blowjob and even a gloryhole fuck. But visit a school with a need aware admissions policy? No way.

What happens at Wash U has a huge impact on your national image, and speaking at this engagement would become an implicit endorsement of the moral depravity that is rampant across your campus. Recklessly lending my virtuous image would take balls, and taking balls is just something that I don't do anymore.

the unthinkable: that the love of your life has tragically ceased to pretend to exist.

Since then my life has been constant sorrow. I have to thank my friends, coaching staff, and even the Sexy Singles in my area because I don't know where I'd be if it weren't for their love and support. I know that those beautiful and kind-hearted women want nothing but the best for me, but their efforts to cheer me up are useless. Though it's appreciated, even the knowledge that Jenny is 22, in my area, and wants to fuck won't bring my Lennay back to the abstract state of perceptible tangibility and concreteness.

Please take my words seriously. One day, before you know it, your loved one may be taken from you as well. Reevaluate your priorities before the unimaginable happens. Take it from me, you don't want to live the remainder of your life with sorrow and regret, only to be comforted by the fact that your loved one is up in heaven with my beloved Lennay, God, and all the other imaginary people who have touched our lives.
