

WUnderground

We're the Newspaper!

VOLUME 15, ISSUE 4

NOV 18 2018

PRICE: LESS THAN YOU'D EXPECT, ACCORDING TO SU

Student Union Defunds Planned Parenthood

Although many groups have recently experienced significant budget cuts at the hands of Student Union, none has been hit harder than Planned Parenthood. The group, which offers family planning and women's health services to women all around the country at little to no cost, will likely be forced to close its doors at the end of the fiscal year, as it will no longer be able to cover operating costs.

"I can't believe they would actually do this," said Nancy Greenwood, a nurse practitioner who works at the recently-doomed Central West End location. "This organization has had such a positive impact on women all across the nation. When we shut down, millions will lose access to the family planning and reproductive healthcare services that we provide. It's like Student Union doesn't even care about the groups that it's responsible for funding."

Greenwood's sentiment has been echoed by women around the globe, with the hashtag #SUckYou trending on Twitter within thirty minutes of the announcement. Protests are currently in the works for nearly every major city in the United States and tensions have only been inflamed by reports that not all student groups experienced comparable cuts. For example, the Anime Exploration Team was awarded 147% of the funds they requested, while College Republicans received enough money in their Spring 2019 budget to cover all of Planned Parenthood's costs in addition to their own. When WUnderground reporters reached out to the treasurer of Student Union regarding these disparities in allocation, they were given a single sheet of computer paper upon which the phrase

"We do what we want" was written in blood.

Despite this widespread backlash, some have applauded the move. Paul Ryan spoke on the matter during a press conference held outside the SU office on Thursday.

"Planned Parenthood has been brainwashing our youth with fables of 'sexual reproduction.' Babies, myself included, are delivered to the doorsteps of married heterosexual couples by big floppy white birds and I will hear no more of these lies about the importance of 'reproductive health.'"

When asked how he responds to the outcry from women across the nation, Ryan replied in confusion: "What's a woman?"

At this time, the exact future of Planned Parenthood remains uncertain. The group plans to appeal for the millions of dollars in funding that it originally requested, but experts say that this desperate attempt to salvage the organization is unlikely to succeed. However, Dr. Leana Wen, president of Planned Parenthood, was able to offer one comfort to the women who will lose access to affordable and accessible reproductive care:

"At least they funded our pizza budget!"

"Why don't I support Planned Parenthood? Because I was a mistake," Ryan informed the press gathered in the DUC Fun Room, "and I want every baby to feel the way I've felt every day of my life."

DSP Adds "Dare to Recycle" Challenge to their Hell Week Program, Solves Climate Change

While Delta Sigma Pi pledges at other universities spent their hell weeks writing business songs, drinking whole milk, and egging their own sinks, the Washington University chapter set their pledges to a more meaningful task: completely solving climate change through the Dare to Recycle program.

DSP member Paul Grundle, who, impressively, is in DSP, recently filled us in about the inspiration behind this initiative. "We were deciding on the final component of our pledges' hell week, and I suggested that we have them look over our resumes again. But then a brother pointed out that I'd already had that done 41 times. That made me realize that it wasn't all about me. It's about the reefs."

Grundle went on to explain how the program works: "The report from DSP Insights pointed to an obvious, economical solution to the entire climate problem: when our pledges see some recyclable waste that's either on the ground or in a trash can, they immediately tell the nearest dining or custodial worker that they should stop what they're doing and move the recyclables to their proper place. If the staff is reluctant to do this, flashing a picture of DeAndre the Habitat-Threatened Tundra Lichen always persuades them."

Junior Gretchen Philips, home for Thanksgiving break, was impressed by the program's success, noting, "I was walking through my neighborhood in Westchester this morning and it's, like, amazing! There's no broken glass from used IV needles anywhere in the streets, no mountains of trash in anyone's front yard, and it's even snowing! Incredible!"

Phi Delta Theta pledge Brick Trowel was floored by the DSP pledges' resolve, saying, "I guess it wasn't easy being forced to smash a glass bottle on my forehead, but telling someone to put those bottle shards in a recycling bin...like wow."

DSP pledge Darrick brilliantly summarized his fraternity's impact when he pointed out that "the entire Northern Hemisphere has gotten colder in the last two weeks. I think that speaks for itself." Ensuring our children have a planet to grow up in: now that is an impressive thing to put on a resume!

Buried WUnderground

Medical Marijuana Beats Out Pro-Suffering Lobby in Missouri

Page Shrek 4

Freshman with Severe Allergy Enters 19th Year of No Nut November

Page Toy Story 3

Grim Reaper Reunited with Estranged Brother Tim Reaper

Page High School Musical 2

"RBG is still sharp as a tack!" Says Liberal Doctor Currently Putting Her in Medically-Induced Coma

Page Ice Age 4

Mourners at Stan Lee funeral Wait 15 Minutes Afterwards for After-Credits Scene

Page Fast and Furious 8

Man with High-Paying Job Kind of Deserves to have Soul Crushed

Page Godzilla 28

WUnderground's Official Guide to Sorority Recruitment

Ok fuckfaces, first semester is coming to a close and the most critical four days of your entire college experience are fastly approaching. You can either come out on top and be the crème de la crème of this university for the next 3.5 years, or come out as the social equivalent of dumpster sludge. Never fear! The women on WUnderground staff (we have those now!) have developed a foolproof guide to scoring a bid from the srat of your dreams.

1: Make it clear that you're too cool for them

No one wants an eager beaver, so let the sororities know you're hot shit. Make it clear that you would rather be literally anywhere else—check the likes on your last insta, ask “how much longer,” say you need to go home and water your roommate’s succulents—girls love when you play hard to get!

2: Capitalize on your pending Sam Fox minor

Now more than ever, it is critical to let everyone know that you're not like other girls. Talk about how you make subpar line drawings of your plants and read 20th century art theory while listening to the ten vinyls you acquired promptly before leaving for college. That Sufjan Stevens one slaps. If you're already a Sam Fox major, great! This will do all the talking for the next 3 years.

3: Let them know you've read through Greekrank

Don't be afraid to share that you know what's what at this school. You know that last year's PC was weak and that the girls have been self-ranking to salvage any integrity the chapter has left. Don't let Becky and her wannabe friends fool you! You have the real unbiased rankings!

4: Make fun of the crying bitch in your Rho Chi group

Nothing asserts your cool-girl status better than some good ol' fashioned bullying. Plus, talking about that hopeless sad sack's tears will make the perfect rush conversation. And if you find yourself crying alone in the gargoyle bathroom the next day because you got cut by all of your top choices, that makes a great conversation too!

5: Break A Limb So That When You're Cut, You Can Claim Disability Discrimination

No one is going to forget wheelchair girl! And if they do, you can really show them who's boss with some bias reporting or just get them kicked off campus with an instigating Op-Ed in Student Life. Hit 'em where it hurts!

6: Tell Them You're Already on the Sig Chi Invite List

Getting in with the right sorority is only half the battle to becoming a full-fledged srat star. Make sure the chapters know that you're one of the 200 freshman girls who “coincidentally” made it onto the Sigma Chi email list because you went to someone's cousin's high school. Oh! And don't forget to name drop the Brett from World War III who still hasn't texted you.

7: Be yourself, but only if you're cool.

Ultimately, the sororities just want someone genuine! However, if your genuine self is totally fucking lame, you should probably just drop out of rush now and make some internet friends who accept you as the irrelevant loser you are. Or even better! Translate your now non-existent self worth into writing satire!

Looking to prepare for life in a sorority? Practice reciting common phrases in the mirror to make sure you nail the inflection. Mantras include 'I love my big,' 'sisterhood!', and an indecipherable squeal that would best be transcribed as a 'woo'.

Top 15...

Ways to Start an Argument at Thanksgiving

15. "So the earth is round, right?"
14. Kiss your mother with that mouth
13. Say you're thankful for your other, better family
12. Put Plan B at your cousin's place setting
11. Break shit
10. Decide that now's the time to start calling your parents by their first names
9. Ask everyone to introduce themselves with preferred pronouns
8. Introduce everyone else while you assume their pronouns
7. Romanticize the Austro-Hungarian empire (Archduke Ferdinand did nothing wrong!)
6. Bring your friend Roger who's a total riot
5. Make a snide comment about Heliocentrism
4. Go balls deep into moral relativism
3. Take a neutral stance on Rogue One
2. Stick your hand up the turkey and use it like a puppet, then say, "I'm George Soros, puppetmaster!"
1. Take a knee

Beto O'Rourke Deletes U.S. Senator Job From Hastily Updated Resume

EL PASO -- Congressman Beto O'Rourke departed early from his election watch party on Tuesday to delete a hastily added job at the U.S. Senate from his resume, according to local reports. O'Rourke was spotted exiting an Uber and fumbling with his keys outside his El Paso office, cursing under his breath while removing his laptop from a disheveled messenger bag. Friends of the voter-friendly O'Rourke believe the congressman added "U.S. Senator" to his history of work experience three days before Super Tuesday, in anticipation of an electoral win. "He sent me an email about 'some new credentials' a few days ago," confirmed Congressman Steve Pearce of New Mexico. "I think he already sent it to a lot of people." According to data obtained from Google, O'Rourke recently deleted several Chrome searches, including "senate salary" and directions from his Texas home to the U.S. Capitol Building.

A representative for Wikipedia noted several changes to the "Career" section of O'Rourke's biographical profile, edits which were quickly redacted late Tuesday evening. "For about six hours or so the page had an entire section about his career as a senator, but when I scrolled back it just read "good campaigner and internet sensation," said the Wikipedia rep. Both sets of edits were reportedly performed by beto-believeit@aol.com.

Point

"There's value in redistricting."

By: Barry Allinson
Nuanced activist

Ok, hear me out here. In some cases, gerrymandering is actually beneficial and can be used as a tool for social justice. Drawing districts in certain ways gives political representation to historically marginalized groups.

Counterpoint

"Jesus Christ, dude."

By: Seamus Fischer
Missouri state legislator

The furries aren't getting their own district, Barry, I've told you like 100 times.