In Lieu of Mental Health Services, Habif Now Offering The Sex Talk

For the kids who went to private school.

"Not only do we offer butt plugs in discreet packaging, but now you can relive that incredibly awkward experience where your dad threw a pack of condoms at you and said 'don't forget to wrap it up' when you were thirteen," says a Habif spokesperson. Habif's new programming called "the talk" joins their roster of pseudo-progressive activities for the spring 2021 semester. "The best part about this fun new programming activity is that it is completely paid for by the most recent tuition increase," says Interim Vice Daddy Rob Wild.

In response to calls from students to improve mental health resources on campus, Habif states: "the talk" serves to bring together our student body from diverse regions within the top 1%, such as the top 0.1% and the plebeians, with a common experience we all went through". For some, this meant getting their first period at summer camp and for others being asked if they know what a condom is at Thanksgiving dinner.

This new initiative is in-line with Habif's instagram that preaches "the solution to mental health crises is lots of masturbation" through pastel colored infographics. When pressed as to what Habif's plans were to deal with their lack of therapy appointments Dr. Wild replied, "Anyone can jerk off for a few weeks; building stamina is a great way to improve self esteem."

Students are actually given the opportunity to attend one of a multitude of talks offered based on their preferred experience. Do you want parents that are a little too sex positive? Do you want to be damned to hell by your youth pastor? Or do you just want to watch the magic school bus go up the fallopian tubes and call it a day? Whatever you want, "the talk" can provide the right experience for you!

Habif even included some amazing student testimonials. "At least this money didn't go to the tulip fund" says senior physics major Kathleen Torrance, "sometimes everyone needs to be reminded that we are all damned to eternity in The Devil's inferno."

"This is so Orwellian, bro" says Tanner Morgan, a brother of the Kappa Sigma fraternity on campus, despite having no idea what 'Orwellian' means.

Whether or not Habif plans to supplement this program with a Circ ride directly to the gates of hell is yet to be determined. "We'd probably have to dip into the Study Cubby fund for that one" says Dr. Wild, "so you might just be stuck with a study chubby." Either way, "the talk" is guaranteed to unite WashU students through a common trauma, getting a hard-on during the sex talk... Wait, just me? Fuck...Yeah I mean...uhhh forget about it, you'd probably think it's stupid anyways.

LOOKING FOR A FAST TRACK TO SALVATION? LOOK NO FARTHER

Indulgences remit sins. Right? WRONG. Ever wondered why you spend hours doing "good works" every day but it doesn't seem to get you anywhere? That's because it never has, and I know that's hard to believe, but it's true. If you've been trying to get into heaven, you know just how confusing it can be. One priest tells you to do penance by prayer, while another "expert" tells you to make donations to the church. But what if I told you you could be forgiven easily just by faith in God alone? You're about to discover the shocking truth about sins. Read my theses below, and learn how to achieve salvation with this one simple trick.

Wellness Day Vacation Checklist

Free at last, free at last!

After weeks of twitching at 60-page readings, barking at Calculus workbooks, projectile vomiting at every Canvas notification, and injecting myself with enough Red Bull to take out your mom, the blessed day hath finally arrived. Our Lord and Savior Andrew Martin descends from the heavens April 12 to lift us from our Zoom-Dine-Study-coffins. Fret no more, because it is here again: Wellness Day.

Not sure how to spend these precious 24 hours? Sucks, because I certainly know what I'm doing. Behold: my Wellness Day Vacation Checklist.

- 1.) Memorize the shuttle schedule for April 13. I have an exam the day after Wellness Day and my study plan, in protest, is to get hit by the Circulator.
- 2.) Do more homework! I am two months behind in all of my classes and honestly not sure which ones I signed up for.
- 3.) Spend $20 on boba in the loop for a 5-second Instagram boomerang.
- 4.) Unleash a flock of carnivorous ducks inside the DUC. Obviously they will be trained to not eat me.
- 5.) Learn my RA's name so I can stop calling him "Big Boy."
- 6.) Ask an Olin kid what's so gross about revenue? That should take up about 4 hours. 5 if I ask why we can't just print more money.
- 7.) Take a day trip to Chicago and not come back.
- 8.) Mail some snow to California. Poor babes are in a drought.
- 9.) Eat my bodyweight in mozzarella sticks.
- 10.) Hook up with my Datamatch. He's a philosophy major but I own earplugs.
- 11.) Foster a cat, teach her the Ways of the Dragon, and then sic her on my piece-of-shit ex.
- 12.) Hook up with my piece-of-shit ex.
- 13.) Call WUPD and ask how much for a purebred sow. A real juicy porker. The hoggiest of hogs. Keep calling and offering more money.
- 14.) Start a Murder Hornet-Keeping Club on campus and schedule their first meeting for any building on Frat Row.
- 15.) Finally go in for that appointment to remove and sell my eggs. I heard three can almost cover a 2.6% tuition increase.

And that's my plan for Monday! If you would like to join me, don't. I will not share my Barstool WashU spotlight with ANYONE. This is my moment to shine, motherfucker.

THE HARVARD MEDICAL SCHOOL

Supplement Question #4: How has an undergraduate volunteer, extracurricular, or research experience better prepared you for medical school?

During the Covid-19 crisis, I wondered, like many other people, what I could do to help bring an end to this pandemic. While some of my peers signed up for the Moderna's human trials, volunteered in overcrowded hospitals, or worked in the labs researching and engineering the vaccine, I decided to help out on the innovative forefront of the development of herd immunity. Along with my colleagues at other R1 research institutions, we spread the pandemic from coast to coast, hitting up every local bar, stock-photo Tinder match, and crusted-over juul, in the name of protecting our community.

At times, it was challenging to juggle my cutting-edge research and academic course load. Sometimes, I'd have to miss spitting into my university-mandated COVID tube to shoot some brewskis with the boys at the off-campus Beta Omega Omega Beta house. During moments like these, I motivated myself to continue superspreading because I knew how important my work was. If I could keep Nemerov at full capacity the entire semester, I thought to myself, then maybe we could do Mardi Gras in person this year. The stakes were too high.

During wellness week, my colleagues and I descended upon Miami in the largest medical conference of 2021. Over the course of the week, I attended lectures by leading COVID experts such as Bethany from UF, who taught the crowds how to repurpose their face masks as trendy bikinis for Friday's darty at the Fontainebleau, and Chad of UM, who proudly announced that the only thing he tested positive for during his mandatory screening was chlamydia.

I was honored to be a keynote speaker at the event. During my semester-long research project, I discovered that COVID was unable to penetrate frat parties on college campuses because it simply did not know a brother. I am humbled by the opportunity I was given to present my research to people from across the globe--it was incredible that people all the way from South Africa, Brazil, and the United Kingdom flew in to hear me speak.

Over the course of the past few months, I have been so lucky to have created such a profound effect on my community. I hope to continue giving back as I start the next chapter in my life: becoming a doctor. I thank you, application committee, for considering me for a spot for Harvard Med class of 2024.

BREAKING: Junior Relieved After Discovering She's Not Into Calling Guys "Daddy"

Junior Audrey Kiser let out a sigh of relief in the early hours of Saturday morning after discovering that she was left unaroused by calling her sexual partner "daddy." "There are a lot of things that my sexual preferences reveal about me that are unideal," said Kiser, "but it was a load off my mind to discover that a psychosexual fascination with my father isn't one of them. It's just such a relief that there's nothing to question or unpack here."

With this phenomenon being so common, some people are bound to find themselves on the other side of the equation. We spoke to several such students, who also seemed glad for these realizations. "I mean, I've had lots of girls tell me that they were glad to have slept with me because it helped them realize what they don't like," said sophomore math major and (unprompted) self-reported feminist David Becker, "and now that I know that it's part of some, like, self-knowledge thing, I'm just glad to have helped."

Though many students lauded the open conversation started by Kiser's comments, others took a more negative view. "I'm no prude, but I don't think it's appropriate to discuss things like this so broadly," said junior biomedical engineering major Joanna Zahalsky. "I hate to use an absurd example, but what's next? Thinly veiled autobiographical satirical newspaper articles about weird sex stuff? It's honestly gross."

Although it may seem intrusive that we were in the room with Audrey Kiser when she decided to try calling her sexual partner "daddy," it was quite eye opening as we were able to capture the exact moment when the disgust crossed her face, and have hence been able to share it with you.

In Defense of Greek Life, via an Outsider

Since this summer, over half of WashU's Greek system has deactivated after calls for abolition. With Instagram accounts like @agl-washu and @whydropped_washu gaining traction, it's unclear what the future of Greek life will be on our campus. However, as someone who has never been part of the Greek system, I am strongly against its abolition. It's important to remember just how much of a positive impact Greek life has had on our university! The contributions are endless.

I'd be remiss if I didn't mention the most obvious contribution first: friendship! This perk is self-explanatory so I'll keep it short, but in the words of a former SAE president, Greek life gave him friends, and friends are good! Who doesn't want to make new friends while bonding over a shared passion for the great nation of Greece? However, I know this friendship can be expensive, which leads me to my next point.

Even though fraternities and sororities require hundreds of dollars of their members' (parents') hard-earned money, it's all for a good cause: the Greek economy. As many of you probably know, Greece experienced an economic downfall in 2015. In response, Greek organizations across the U.S. began raising money to deal with the humanitarian crises created by the collapse, tackling issues like homelessness and suicide awareness. So altruistic of them!

Finally, I feel it's important to acknowledge the beautiful cultural appreciation that transpires from Greek life. Members spend so much time recognizing Greece's vast cultural exports: Reading Percy Jackson, watching Mamma Mia! and Hercules, ordering from Gyro Grill, spoon-feeding each other Greek yogurt, running marathons, chugging olive oil... The list goes on and on.

The abolition movement is nothing but a conspiracy from Italy. I've seen some Breitbart articles: they just want to abolish Greek life so they can institute Roman life. We're cowards and fools if we crumble to that pressure. With all of that said, go forth young freshmen; rush to find your new Hellenic family.
