A Psychoanalysis of My Nancy Pelosi Themed Night Terrors

This was the 24th consecutive night I have been jolted awake screaming, cowering in my bed, guarding my face expecting to see her bob-haircut and floral scarf blowing in the cold wind gusting through my window. In the moments before I awake, I am trembling. She clasps my shoulders with her old, COVID-susceptible ladyfingers and whispers, "I'll make you a bitch like Mitch." As she utters these words, my hand begins to turn gray, my neck droops and pinches to form a crevice, and I develop an eerie desire to be bound and gagged by Rudy Giuliani.

nonsense big city lights in New York.

I might be losing my mind like a snowflake dem, but is crazy Nancy trying to siphon power away from dreamy Mitch McConnell? Is this why he looks like an even more antisemitic Dumbledore with his hand and face falling off? She whispered that she would cause me to wither away like Mitch, how is she doing this? Is she tapping into every American man's deepest, yet most terrifying desire: complete and total submission? Has she lured Mitch to her libshart sex dungeon in the catacombs of the Capitol building?

This is what these twisted dreams have been trying to tell me all along! Neuterin' Nancy is literally whipping our American heroes into submission! Now it's McConnell, but she'll move up the ranks to engulf cabinet members like Betsy DeVos or even Emperor Trump himself. I need to stop this radical commie from ending American traditions like voter suppression.

And they say a Psych degree won't get you anywhere.

I am beginning to think it results from some repressed desire to be emasculated. Is it because of the internalized oppression of my forced circumcision? I'm a red-blooded American, but I am nothing without my favorite hoodie. This seems like a plausible explanation as to why I would want one of our nation's juiciest hunks, America's mayor, to step on me. It's totally not because I've had a celebrity crush on Rudy since I was but a budding centrist in my small hometown, dreaming of the no-

BREAKING: CHANCELLOR MARTIN STARTS AN ONLYFANS

NOVEMBER 2020-

Desperate times call for desperate measures. As full-time enrollment has dwindled this semester due to the rise of the COVID-19 virus, the University has encountered a large loss of revenue. In an attempt to combat this budget deficit, Chancellor Martin has turned to one of the internet's fastest growing self-employment opportunities: OnlyFans.

For only four dollars a month, students can not only support WashU through these trying financial times, but also see exclusive, naughty footage of the chancellor himself doing such scandalous activities as pissing on the bunny, sitting in the DUC without food, or even taking a peek at the physics answers on Chegg.

"Honestly, I feel like the whole 'I'm starting an OnlyFans' thing is overdone," says sophomore Jordan Neeley. "Did I subscribe? I mean of course, but I still think OnlyFans is just low-hanging fruit. Like, we get it, it's porn, it's funny. Whatever."

Some students are criticizing Martin's choice of content on the platform, feeling particularly misled by the connotations of his account, as well as OnlyFans' reputation as a pay-for-porn site. Em Powers is one such student.

"I did not scrounge up four dollars to see Chancellor Martin sloppily use the internet, or get yelled at by DUC hospitality staff," Powers said. "I did it to see him throw some ass."

When asked for a comment, Chancellor Martin sent a jpeg of himself in a catgirl costume to my personal email account.

WashU Rolls Out Groundbreaking Foreskin Skin Grafts

CLEARLY, RICHARD JOHNSON IS DOING THE LORD'S WORK.

ST. LOUIS, MO.-

In a groundbreaking new experiment, WashU researchers have found a unique use for circumcised foreskin as skin grafts for burn victims. Lead researcher and BME postdoc Richard Johnson remembers: "A male student approached me in tears, because he didn't know what had happened to his foreskin. Then I felt inspired. How could I use foreskin to help people?"

He noticed that Michael, one of his favorite burn victims, was in desperate need of more skin for a graft. But they were running out of source areas on his body, so it was time to innovate. Thus was born the Michael Method, which freezes removed foreskin to be used for potential future grafts.

With the help of a grant from the St. Louis Rabbinical College, Johnson has begun conducting experimental trials on WashU students. After his team marketed the experiment as free circumcisions for lucky students, a large proportion of the engineering school signed up. So far, his team has collected over 200 foreskins, a remarkable harvest. They plan to use the now vacant Rudolph Hall as the site of the controlled fires to which the experimental subjects will be exposed.

"Foreskin is the way of the future!" Johnson cheers, beaming with pride. "With the rise in wild-fires we are seeing, uncircumcised adult men would be wise to ask their doctor or rabbi to freeze it. It might save their lives." Johnson's research reveals that The Michael Method has the potential to save up to 6 lives each year. The other 194 subjects will be commemorated in a service held this Wednesday at noon on Mudd Field.

Excessive Time with ResLife Carpeting has Unforeseen Psychological Consequences

ST. LOUIS, MO.-

With students spending more time in their rooms than ever because of COVID restrictions, rumors of a possible new epidemic, one of bizarre behavior, have been raising alarm across campus. One sophomore living in Gregg House, known for its particularly offensive carpet pattern, relayed his observations of a case of the new and mystifying disease, though we cannot independently confirm his account, in compliance with HIPAA. "He'd been sitting in the common room for a few hours, then, all of a sudden, he got really quiet. Before I knew it, he was shaking and trying to dig at the carpet. He was almost, like, foaming at the mouth."

Accounts of similar disturbing occurrences have swept campus over the past week, causing mass concern. With frustrations rising, many students turned a critical eye to the selection of carpet patterns. "Listen, I appreciate its stain-hiding abilities as much as the next guy," said freshman Justin Liu, "but come on—there's only so much WashU can expect us to take, aesthetically speaking."

Attempts to communicate the problem to school administration proved unsuccessful at first. However, it was soon discovered that those attempts had in fact been foiled when the student mentioned the similarity of this phenomenon to that depicted in the Charlotte Perkins Gilman story "The Yellow Wallpaper," at which point reports indicate that the administrator would respond, "Oh yeah, I think I read that in high school," effectively derailing the conversation.

HE JUST COULDN'T TAKE IT ANYMORE.

Obvious Serf Announces that They Would Have Been a Lord in the Middle Ages

In an astonishing lack of self-awareness, a man most on-lookers would have pegged for a serf the instant they laid eyes on his hunched demeanor and glassy, vacant eyes, claimed that he would have been a lord in the Middle Ages.

Jonathan Morrington, a 38-year-old field laborer and Renaissance Faire enthusiast, astounded most coworkers with his proclamation. "You mean to tell me that this man would have been a member of the ruling class, swearing fealty only to the king? He's practically wearing a veil and wimple for God's sake!" said an irate onlooker.

Listeners described the horror of how, at first, they believed Morrington's announcement to be a bad joke (a testament to how he could not have made it as a court jester either), but when it became apparent that Morrington believed the controversial claim, they were shocked and confused. "I mean, this man is clearly illiterate, he'd obviously be more at home in a leper colony than a manor," remarked another at the scene.

Sources believe that Morrington's mind must have been muddled by his many Renaissance Faire trips, in which he dressed as a lord and attempted to impress the wenches with his sizable sword (an attendee has confirmed that this ploy was unsuccessful). In a stroke of good fortune for Morrington, however, most agree that he does resemble a lord in one way: a characteristic over-indulgence of mutton.

Op-Ed: Op-Ed

Well, I'd have to think about it some more. I mean, if this were real, and I weren't just speaking hypothetically, then of course I'd know. It's important to consider the context, however, as well as the various options from which to choose. There are many different forces at play, so I'm not totally sure.

I know this may sound kind of silly, but I do think it is worth figuring out. I mean, I don't want to offend anyone. Moreover, it is kind of difficult to parse out the most important aspects, so I'm trying to inform myself as much as possible. Normally I'd know for sure, but these are unusual circumstances, so really, I'm not that sure.

I need more time to consider the alternatives, but I'm definitely getting closer. Especially given the current social and political climate, it's crucial now more than ever to get this right. I know it's tough, so I appreciate everyone's willingness to engage and listen. I'm still thinking about it, so in that sense, I am pretty sure.

In another sense, though, I'm not that sure. Weighing the pros and cons really sheds light on both the good and the bad, so I'm trying to prioritize what's most important. If you think about the arguments, you get a pretty good understanding of the various perspectives. Unfortunately, this complicates things even more.

What I'm really getting at more than anything else is that I think so, but I'm still not sure. I mean, who's to say? When you think about it, it's not that clear of a choice. But when you think about it some more, the choice becomes a bit more clear. I'm continuing to weigh the options, but I'm definitely leaning towards one or the other, I think.
